Nazis Pledge To Respect Treaty Rights Of Americans

But Reply to Welles Insists Nothing in Law Restrains Reich From Race Decrees

The Foreign Situation

Pledge From Nazis

By William V. Neesly.

The United States has obtained from Germany assurance that treaty rights of American citizens will be respected in the Reich's application of her decrees respecting minorities.

At the same time the Berlin government insists there is nothing in international law to bind her to refrain from "discriminatory treatment of foreign citizens . . . based on race or creed or other characteristics."

These revelations came yesterday in a new note from Germany and this country's reply, made public here, on the subject of persecution of Jews and other minority groups in Germany.

Question of Treaties

Thus, the protracted dispute between the two governments apparently had narrowed down to an immediate question of whether treaties, particularly that entered into by the Berlin and Washington governments on December 8, 1923, forbid application of discriminatory German decrees to citizens of the United States residing in Germany or with property in that land.

It was the 1923 treaty which was cited by the United States in an "emphatic protest" in connection with the anti-Jewish decrees of May 9, 1937. The protest and citation brought exemption for Americans from that order that Jews register all property in Germany, property which the government was authorized under the decree to take over and use "in harmony with the requirements of German economy."

The treaty in general guarantees the protection and rights of nationals of each of the countries within the territories of the other. The United States insisted its provisions are "applicable to all the nationals of the other country without exceptions based on race or creed."

The State Department disclosed that Prentiss B. Gilbert, charge d'affaires of the American embassy in Berlin, already had reported to the German foreign office a number of cases of alleged infringements of treaty rights of Americans.

The Berlin communication was in reply to one delivered on last December 24 at the direction of Acting Secretary of State Sumner Welles, which was intended to serve as a final exposition of the United

Motorists Find That Lusty Kick Makes Meters Tick

Certain motorists have discovered a method of "beating" parking meters to make the clockwork begin ticking without the use of nickels, it was revealed yesterday by Tax Collector Statham Towers.

"They just kick the meter, and 60 minutes of free time in a reserved space is theirs," Towers said.

There are seven meters that "lend" themselves to kicks, and all are located on F street. They will be repaired so that only a nickel will make them tick.

Father's Car Kills Daughter, 4, Taken to Meet Him on Sled

BETTY AMBERGER

Blinded by Snow He Runs Down Child in Prince Georges Road As Mother, Towing Her, Screams

Four-year-old Betty Amberger couldn't wait to see her father yesterday, and last night she was dead, crushed under the wheels of her father's automobile.

Betty begged her mother to take her in her sled over 1939's first snow to meet her father, due to be on his way home from the filling station he operates at Landover road and Defense highway in Prince Georges County. They set out, Mrs. Amberger towing the little girl on her sled.

A quarter of a mile from their home, an automobile approached through the blinding snow. Slithering and groping its way, it struck the sled. Mrs. Amberger screamed, the car stopped, and Paul Amberger, the baby's father, stepped out.

He told police he could not see through his windshield, iced over by the snow which had so delighted Betty.

Attracted by Mrs. Amberger's screams, James F. Fitzhugh, a neighbor, rushed the child to the rescue unit of the Bladensburg fire department. She was pronounced dead on arrival at Casualty Hospital.

U. S. Checks Loyalties of Canal Workers

Zone Residents' Friends Here Asked for Facts On Their Antecedents

A close checkup on the national loyalties and citizenship of residents of the Panama Canal Zone has been under way for some time by military and civil authorities, it was learned yesterday.

News of the checkup leaked out when Washington relatives and friends began receiving requests for documentary evidence of their citizenship and antecedents of Canal Zone residents.

While War Department authorities stated such action had been taken without their knowledge, a key official in the Army headquarters organization remarked that determination of the status of persons living in the Canal Zone would be a logical action in view of unsettled world conditions.

Army Itself May Be Included

He added that guarding the security of the canal is the responsibility of Maj. Gen. David L. Stone, commander of United States forces there, and Brig. Gen. Clarence S. Ridley, governor of the Canal Zone.

Explaining that the Army is "thoroughly cognizant" of the importance of guarding the inviolability of defense secrets, he stated that the military service is also aware of the "essential importance" of having the best possible officers on duty as military attaches abroad and in su-

Hungary's Deal With Axis Perils Rumania

Magyar Minority Gives Hitler Lever Against King Carol

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, Jan. 13.—German's push to the east received fresh impetus today from Hungary's decision to join the anti-comitern pact, in which Germany, Italy and Japan are linked.

An official announcement said Count Stephen Csaky, Hungarian foreign minister, had accepted the invitation of the German, Italian and Japanese ministers to Budapest to join their common front against the Communist International.

Hungary's adherence to the pact may have far-reaching effects on Rumania.

King Carol II has been under heavy pressure from Germany to move more closely into Berlin's economic orbit.

Transylvania Threatened

Apparently he has preferred to keep his country as independent as possible, but Transylvania, which has a large Hungarian-German population, is something which the monarch must watch carefully.

Conceivably, if Rumania should insist upon remaining aloof and if the drive toward the east should continue nevertheless, Hungary might be rewarded by the axis powers by their support of Hungarian aspirations in Transylvania, which Rumania gained from Austro-Hungary after the World War.

Court Mix-up Frees Ex-Convict Indicted for Grand Larceny

Robert W. (Mickey) McManus, 22, walked free out of the District jail Thursday night, despite a grand larceny indictment, it was revealed last night, as Federal marshals and District police joined in a hunt for him.

But he was believed already far from Washington in the mixup which caused Police Judge Hobart Newman to set him free.

Confusion of records between Police Court and District Court clerks caused McManus' release, investigation showed yesterday.

Officials compared notes, but disagreed over who, or what, was to blame. They agreed only that McManus, alias Earl Wilson Johnes, who previously served a term for breaking and entering, was gone.

Astonished at disappearance of the man his office was about to prosecute, District Attorney Pine caused a bench warrant to be issued to get McManus back.

Facts brought to light were:

A $350 flood sanding machine and $180 worth of clothing were stolen from the parked car of William E. Holt, Newark, N. J., November 2, 1937.

A year later the case was solved and Assistant District Attorney Jackson presented it to the grand jury. Before the jury acted, he was called to Police Court, where Judge McMahon was preparing to release McManus because no charge had been filed.

Detective J. K. Baker swore out a warrant and McManus went to jail in $2,000 bail, pending preliminary hearing December 29.

A few minutes later the grand jury indicted McManus, sending the case directly to District Court and making the hearing unnecessary.

Rain Likely To End D. C. Frigid Wave

Slush, Ice Cause Many Car Crashes; Hit-Run Victim in Serious Condition

Fair and warmer weather is in prospect for Washington today after a 3-inch snowfall disrupted traffic, brought scores of minor accidents, sent one man to the hospital with frozen feet and another with serious injuries following a hit-run accident.

The Weather Bureau said last night the steady snowfall would turn to rain early today, with clear skies and rising temperatures predicted for this afternoon. A moderate disturbance moving in from the Canadian northwest, however, may spoil the week-end with more snow or rain tomorrow, forecasters said.

The mercury is expected to rise into the 30's following a low of 27 degrees at 2 p. m. yesterday. Weather Bureau officials announced. By sundown yesterday, the snow had turned to sleet forcing motorists to make frequent stops to scrap ice-coated windshields.

The snowstorm which gripped the Capital raged through a large part of the Eastern seaboard, causing one of the worst traffic jams in the history of New York City in the afternoon rush hour. Chainless trucks stalled on three bridges, delaying homeward bound motorists more than an hour in some cases, the United Press reported.

Police asked radio stations to broadcast a warning to suburbanites to use some other form of transportation to reach their offices. In the face of a 25-degree temperature and a blinding blizard, New York authorities feared the possibility of fire. Apparatus responding to an alarm in lower Manhattan was forced to take to the sidewalks.

Nearby Districts Blanketed

Snow and sleet blanketed most of the northern section of Virginia last night, while rain and near freezing temperatures were reported for other sections, according to the Associated Press.

A man identified as Thomas Eagle, of Knoxville, Md., died in his burning truck-trailer after it had been struck by a north-bound Norfolk & Western passenger train near Boyce. A heavy snow fell in that section during the day.

At Strasburg 6 to 8 inches of snow covered the ground, and roads were slippery, but no accidents were reported. The temperature had dropped to 29 at 7 p. m.

Harrisonburg reported 4½ inches of snow and sleet on the highways, but no serious accidents. At sunset the temperature was down to 25 degrees.

Virginia to Be Warmer

About 3 inches of snow and sleet covered the Staunton area. Chill winds formed a light crust over the snow.

Newport News reported .62 of an inch of rain and a maximum temperature of 45 degrees at the Langley Field Meteorological station. A low of 38 degrees was forecast. Rain also was reported at Norfolk.

The temperature at Danville was dropping rapidly from 36 degrees

Woman Invalid Burned to Death By Cigarette Fire

A 54-year-old invalid was burned to death in her home at 621 Keefer place northwest yesterday when her clothing caught fire from falling cigarette ashes.

The victim, Mrs. Rosalie Nicholas, was found unconscious on the second floor with her clothing afire by Fannie McClary, of 907 M street northwest, her nurse for the last week.

Miss McClary told police that she was downstairs preparing food for Mrs. Nicholas when she smelled smoke. She rushed up and found Mrs. Nicholas lying on the floor.

Police said Mrs. Nicholas, who had been suffering from high blood pressure, was apparently smoking in bed.

Number 24 Engine Company put out the fire. Mrs. Nicholas was pronounced dead by Dr. Richard Gitter, of Casualty Hospital.

Files Show Street Urged Job on Lewis

Investigator Went Before Committee On Request of Welfare Director

Board of Public Welfare records yesterday gave Burdette G. Lewis, District relief investigator, and board officials a draw in their controversy over whether Lewis had applied to the board for the job of superintendent of local penal institutions.

Lewis appeared, the records show, in response to a request by Elwood Street, director of public welfare, before the penal committee of the board as a candidate for the position on September 28, 1934.

The committee, however, did not recommend him. The only reference to Lewis in the committee's minutes is his appearance. Several other candidates were interviewed in the fall of 1934.

No Formal Application

Board records, nevertheless, do not show that Lewis formally made application for the job. Street, on June 4, 1934, wrote to Lewis that Capt. M. M. Barnard would soon retire as superintendent of penal institutions, and asked whether he would be interested in the job.

Street said Sanford Bates, president of Federal Prison Industries, Inc., had suggested that he (Lewis) might be willing to become a candidate.

"If you would be interested," Street said, "won't you write, giving whatever significant material regarding training and experience you have so I could discuss it with the Board of Public Welfare. I, of course, know, in general, your experience and background, but I would like the precise material.

"We Want the Best Man"

"We intend to develop here in the District of Columbia the best penal system in the United States, and we want to get the best man in the country who would be available for the job. I want a creative, progressive piece of work done to serve as a model for the rest of the country."

Lewis, on June 27, wrote Street: "In answer to your request, I am sending an analytical statement of some of the high spots of my experience, which were prepared by my secretary."

The outline shows that Lewis served as a statistician and in various other capacities in New York City from 1901 to 1910.

Predicted Depression

Lewis said he served as chief assistant to John Purroy Mitchel, president of the New York Board of Alderman from 1910 to 1914 and mayor from 1914 to 1918, and as commissioner of institutions and agencies in New Jersey from 1918 to 1926.

The outline says he "foretold the depth and extent of the depression, and formulated remedies therefor, as early as 1921, which are now slowly going into effect."

Welfare directors of the country, in conferences in Chicago in 1932 and 1933, the outline explains, "agreed that Burdette Lewis had been the outstanding public welfare

Murphy Reveals Ultimatum Stopped 1937 Auto Sit-Down

Senate Group Repeats Approval at Special Session He Requested

Frank Murphy, former Governor of Michigan, making an unprecedented appearance before a Senate sub-committee that had already approved his nomination as Attorney General, yesterday declared his belief that sit-down strikes are illegal and revealed he had read a virtual ultimatum to John L. Lewis, head of the C. I. O., the day before the settlement of the General Motors strike of February, 1937.

Immediately after the hearing, the Senate group affirmed its indorsement of Murphy. He almost certainly will be approved by the full Judiciary Committee Monday and confirmed by the Senate the following day.

The bushy-browed nominee, born in a log cabin 48 years ago, carefully expounded his philosophy as an administrator at the hearing which had been called especially at his request to enable him to clarify his position on the labor disputes that rocked his State early in 1937.

"I have never condoned the sit-down strike or countenanced disobedience of a court order," Murphy declared. "From the very beginning of the labor trouble in Michigan, I warned the union representatives that the sit-down strike was illegal, and, further, that its use would alienate public opinion."

But, said Murphy, in the crucial condition of employer-employe relations at the height of the General Motors sit-down, he believed that "'faithful execution' by the Governor of a State includes wise administration of the law and not merely literal instantaneous application at any cost."

The man who is to be chief law officer of the United States spoke emphatically of charges that he ignored a court order requiring the

Health Chiefs Move to End Farm Sit-Out

Sharecroppers Must Be Moved if a Peril To Hygiene, They Say

By the Associated Press.

New Madrid, Mo., Jan. 13.—State police and health authorities moved swiftly tonight to end the demonstration of a weather-beaten army of more than 1,000 sharecroppers who have been living in the open along southeast Missouri highways since Tuesday.

The cotton croppers' protest against their poverty reached a climax when it was announced they would be moved out if they were found to be a "menace to public health."

"I don't know where we wuold put them,' said Superintendent B. M. Casteel of the Missouri State highway patrol. "But if they threaten public health they must be moved somewhere."

Doctors in Command

Col. Casteel and Dr. Harry Parker, State health director, came into the area late today from the State capital at Jefferson City to take command of the situation. Adjutant Gen. Lewis M. Means plans to be here early tomorrow.

The State patrol completed a survey of farms in five counties to determine the number of homeless families that might be cared for if they are ordered to leave their roadside camps.

Meanwhile, the rain-soaked group hung on stubbornly in near freezing temperatures.

Hull Agrees To Map Inquiry Into Lobbies

Accepts Challenge After Argument at Senate Body Hearing

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Hull emerged from a critical barrage of Senate committee questioning on his trade program yesterday with an unofficial commission to draft legislation for an investigation of "tariff lobbyists" he said were intent on wrecking it.

The Secretary was called before the Senate Finance Committee for questioning about his policy in reciprocal trade treaties.

Senators from sugar-producing States wanted to ask him particularly about reports that the United States, without waiting for public hearings on a proposed revision of the trade treaty with Cuba, had already promised Cuba that the American duty on sugar would be cut from 90 to 75 cents a hundredweight.

Attacks Sugar Lobby

Hull denied the reports, and from a defense of the department's trade policies swung quickly to the attack by volunteering that "this town now is swarming with sugar lobbyists."

"I think it is only due to the American people, when our foreign trade is falling off, to know that the city is swarming with lobbyists who are hanging on our flanks to attack the trade agreements program," he added.

Break of Five at Alcatraz Sends Bennett to Coast in Ire

By Edward T. Folliard

Officials of the Department of Justice were astonished and chagrined by yesterday's attempted "break" at Alcatraz Penitentiary, so much so that James V. Bennett, director of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, last night sped for San Francisco to conduct his own investigation on "The Rock."

BARKER,

Bennett planned to seek answers to these primary questions:

How did notorious Arthur (Doc) Barker and the other four incorrigibles get saws, and how were they able to carry them through the "gun detectors," the apparatus that indicates when a prisoner is carrying the tiniest piece of metal?

How did they then saw through presumably "tool-proof" steel bars, two sets of them?

Why, since all five men were in individual cells, were they not detected?

There have been other breaks and attempted breaks from the "escape-proof" island prison, located in San Francisco Bay on a 12-mile rocky ledge, a mile and a half from the mainland. In December, 1937, Ralph Roe, bank robber, and Ted Cole, kidnaper, broke from a machine shop, jimmied a wire fence gate, and went o[illegible] the cliff into the bay. Civil Service Denied To WPA; Politics Barred; 399-16 Vote Splits Party Lines

By Robert C. Albright.

The House last night upheld a 17 per cent committee slash in the President's deficiency relief estimates, then again broke beyond party bounds to write sweeping changes in WPA policies.

The $725,000,000 bill, carrying some half dozen modifying amendments, was passed by a 399 to 16 vote.

The measure now goes to the Senate, where Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, is preparing a rigid formula for distribution of relief funds and where Appropriations Chairman Glass is demanding heavy slashes.

The amended House bill provides enough money to keep an average of 2,377,049 workers on relief rolls through June 30. The President had urged $875,000,000 to provide 2,870,000 jobs.

An Administration effort to restore the $150,000,000 cut was defeated by a 226 to 137 teller vote, as 107 Democrats joined 119 Republicans to slash the President's figure.

Aliens Barred by Vote

There followed a series of restrictions on politics in relief, revision of WPA wage policies and other limitations on the agency which leaders were powerless to halt.

These changes included:

An amendment by Representative Cole (Republican), of New York, barring WPA workers who attempt to influence another relief employe politically.

A similar restriction, by Representative Voorhis (Democrat), of California, confined only to administrators and WPA officers, bosses and foremen.

An amendment by Representative Tarver (Democrat), of Georgia, requiring WPA to eliminate wage differentials of more than 25 per cent between laborers in the same class.

A prohibition on WPA hiring of aliens by Representative Boren (Democrat) of Oklahoma.

An amendment by Representative McCormack (Democrat), of Massachusetts, banning WPA removal of workers because they are over 65 or women with dependent children.

A ban on the Farm Security Administration or any other Federal agency establishing hosiery mills in competition with private industry, proposed by a Republican, Representative Seger, of New Jersey.

Civil Service Status Blocked

A Republican motion to send the bill back to committee and provide only $350,000,000 to last WPA through April 7 was thundered down and no record vote was demanded. Nor were separate record votes asked by leaders on any of the modifying changes.

Included in the measure as passed was the Appropriation Committee's blockade of the President's executive order placing some 33,000 WPA administrative workers under civil service on February 1.

Representative Ramspeck (Democrat), of Georgia, chairman of the House Civil Service Committee, led a futile effort to include WPA employes in the President's general administrative order. His amendment was defeated.

Representative Woodrum (Democrat), of Virginia, floor manager, was upheld on every essential provision of the committee measure, including the Woodrum amendment, requiring spread of the funds over the entire five months.

Satisfied with the $150,000,000 cut under budget estimates, Woodrum joined Majority Leader Rayburn in attempting to stop added modifica-

Bill in House Would Extend ICC Contol

Proposal Provides Regulation of All Transportation

By the Associated Press.

A broad extension of Government regulation of transportation was proposed in the House yesterday as a means of rahabilitating the railroads.

Chairman Lea (Democrat), California, of the House Interstate Commerce Committee, introduced a bill to give the Interstate Commerce Commission jurisdiction over all forms of interstate transportation and the power to establish minimum rates to restrict "destructive competition" in the industry.

Lea, who prepared the legislation in co-operation with representatives of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Maritime Commission, talked it over with President Roosevelt, but did not indicate what the President's attiture was.

Hearings Begin Tuesday

In his annual message last week, Mr. Roosevelt asked Congress for legislation "to ameliorate our railroad and other transportation problems."

Lea announced that his committee would open hearings on the legislation next Tuesday. He said Walter M. W. Splawn, I. C. C. member, would be the first witness.

Major Proposals

Here are major proposals in Lea's bill:

Expansion of the 11-man Interstate Commerce Commission to a 13-man commission, with 9 supervising rate matters only, 5 handling financial problems and the other five constituting an appeals board for reviews of decisions of the rate-making section: Creation of an administrator within the I. C. C. to determine "the relative economy and fitness" of rail, motor and water carriers and to recommend steps to limit the use of each type "to the purposes for which it is best fitted."

Transferring authority from the I. C. C. to the carriers themselves to initiate consolidation, merger, leasing and similar organization proceedings; creation of a special railroad reorganization court of three circuit and district judges.

Broadening of the I. C. C.'s jurisdiction over rates and fares to include common carriers by water in interstate commerce on inland, canal or coastwise routes, including barge lines on the Mississippi and other rivers.

Allowing the commission to prescribe minimum rates to be charged by any transportation agency, including railroads, motor trucks, motor bus, coastwise shipping, inland water carriers, pipe lines and airplanes.

The bill would authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to the carriers for equipment and for encouragement of "the employment of labor." It also would repeal land grant statutes giving the Government certain preferential transportation rates which the railroads have said cost them $7,000,000 annually.

G. A. O. Employe Hailed To Court Over Child

Temporary custoday of the child was awarded to Harry Scott Newman, of the 2800 block of Twenty-seventh street northwest, who informed Justice Bailey, through Attorney Jean M. Boardman, that his wife had hidden the child from him and refused to disclose her whereabouts.

Rep. Ditter Heads G. O. P. Congressional Committee, Succeeding Rep. Martin

The National Republican Congressional Committee yesterday elected Representative J. William Ditter, of Pennsylvania, chairman, succeeding he succeding Representative Joseph W. Martin, jr., of Massachusetts, the new minority leader.

REP. DITTER

Ditter had been Eastern vice chairman of the Congressional Committe since 1937, and Representative Richard B. Wigglesworth, Massachusetts, was elected to that post.

Alternate Albert E. Carter, of California, was re-elected vice chairman representing the Pacific States; Representative Everett M. Dirksen, of Illinois, re-elected vice chairman for the Middle West, and Representative John M. Robsion, of Kentucky, re-elected vice chairman for the Southern and border States.

Representative Clifford R. Hope, of Kansas, was re-elected secretary, and Robert W. Fleming, of Washington, treasureer. Earl Venable, of Idaho, was again chosen executive secretary.

The House Un-American Activities Committee received that the ew Republican magazine was a Communist weely.

The affidavit was sent to deny a statement made before the committee last October by Harper Knowles and Ray Nimmo, who said they represented the radical research committee of the California American Legion.

"This statement," Bliven told the committee, "is without any foundation whatever in fact. The New Republic is not and never has been a Communist organ of any kind, directly or indirectly."

Representative Boland (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, the Democratic whip, yesterday announced appointment of 16 assistant whips for the session.

Representative Ford (Democrat), of California, was named chief assistant, replacing former Representative Dockweiler (Democrat), of California, unsuccessful candidate last year for the Democratic nomination for Governor of California.

Representative Randolph, of West Virginia, was among the assistants chosen.

Senate Vote On Hopkins Set For Wednesday

Confirmation Believed A Certainty; He Asks End of WPA Politics

Confirmation of Harry L. Hopkins as Secretary of Commerce will be voted on Wednesday, a committee of the Senate decided yesterday after the former WPA Administrator said he indorsed elimination of politics from the WPA through extension of the civil service and prohibition of political activities to Federal employes.

Senator Bailey, of North Carolina, chairman of the Commerce Committee, said the delay in passing on Hopkins' appointment was due solely to the committee's desire to wait until the full report of the three-day hearings has been printed. Bailey refused to forecast the outcome, but members predicted that Hopkins' confirmation was almost a certainty.

Assuming full responsibility for direction of the WPA, Hopkins deplored mixture of politics with relief, but insisted that "I've done everything I can to prevent it—there's nobody in the United States whom local politicians dislike more than me."

"A Great Mistake"

Hopkins asserted that the Senate made "a great mistake" in defeating the Hatch resolution last term, which would have prohibited persons receiving Federal compensation from engaging in political activity.

"You would freely say that you would welcome legislation extending the corrupt practices act as far as possible to gvie the Department of Justice all power necessary to eliminate these activities?" asked Senator Bailey.

"I would indeed," Hopkins replied. "And Id like to put the WPA administrative employes—all but a few in policy-forming positions—under civil service." A few hours after he had spoken, the House passed a WPA deficiency bill that disregarded the President's and Hopkins' recommendation by specifically excluding WPA employes from the merit system.

"No Sense of Guilt"

Sharply questioned by Senator Johnson, California Republican, in regard to laieged misuse of the WPA in last fall's political campaigns in Pennsylvania and Kentucky, Hopkins asserted with emphasis that "I did the best job I could—I personally have no sense of guilt."

Lawson Begins 3-Year Sentence

Baltimore, Jan. 13 (AP).—William P. Lawson, stock broker, one-time Republican State chairman, and former Baltimore police commissioner, started a three-year sentence today in the Maryland Hous of Correction for conspiracy to defraud customers of his now defunst brokerage firm.

Three associates, Frederick A. Ueller, Frank Mueller and Vincent L. Clisham, started sentences of one year.

Shouldering full responsibility, Lawson told Judge Joseph N. Ulman, who imposed the sentences, the other men "simply carried out" his instructions and that "a great injustice" was done them.

Let WPA Build Military Roads, President Says

North-South Highways Possible, He Asserts, Before Fund Is Cut

By the Associated Press.

At a press conference a few hours before the House voted to reduce the relief appropriation from $875,000,000 to $725,000,000, President Roosevelt suggested yesterday that a substantial portion of the WPA funds could be used to construct transcontinental and North-and-South highways that would serve a military purpose.

He said that now that essential needs of localities, schools, local roads, sewers and other improvements, had been pretty well taken care of, thought was being given to diverting WPA funds and labor to construction of through highways that would fit into plans for national defense.

It seemed to be more popular on Capitol Hill, he said, to talk about North-and-South and transcontinental highways than other projects for employment of WPA labor.

Skilled Labor Scarce

The President expressed the belief for the Government wouldn't need to engage in manufacture of airplanes to turn out the 3,000 additional militray planes recommended in his defense message. He told his press conference he thought existing private plants were sufficient, although it might be necessary for them to run two or three shifts.

The only bottleneck in the airplane industry, the President said, was the lack of specially skilled labor, comprising about 15 per cent of the labor needed to carry through the airplane construction program. The other 85 per cent, he said, could be developed rapidly from skilled labor in the automotive industry.

The Government will continue, the President added, to develop experimental airplanes and guns would be made, as in the past, in Government munitions plants.

Navy Yards Spread Work

Asked about recent conferences with Charles Edison, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, on the lag in the Navy's ship building program, the President denied that this was due to labor troubles.

The Navy had experienced some difficulty in getting materials, he said, but the main difficulty was the tendency of Navy shipyards to try to sperad work over the year to provide steady employment.

It was a common practcie, he said, to divert men from construction of a new fighting ship to overhaul an old ship, which inevitably slowed up completion of new ships.

Former Md. Slave Will Be 100 Today

Annapolis, Jan. 13 (AP).—Lavin H. Nash, born a slave, who still totes 100-pound coal sacks to see if he's "getting weak," will be 100 years old tomorrow.

The aged colored man cannot read or write, but clearly remembers events before the Civil War, in which he was drafted. Richmond fell soon after, and he never saw service.

"That suited me," he said today; "I didn't want no war; I was scared to death."

Court Told Law Can't Make Sit-Down Valid

Labor Act Doesn't Cover Plant Seizure, Fansteel Corp. Argues

By the Associated Press.

Counsel for the Fansteel Metallurgical Corporation, of North Chicago, contended yesterday before the Supreme Court that the right of self-organization guaranteed workmen by the national labor relations act "does not embrace a license to seize the employer's plant" in a sit-down strike.

This assertion was made by Max Swiren, Fansteel attorney. Previously Charles Fahy, general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, had argued that the board acted well within its authority in ordering Fansteel to reinstate workmen woh were discharged after they seized two key buildings in 1937 and held them for nine days.

Workers Themselves Appeal

The board contended that the company, by refusing to bargain collectively, had been guilty of an unfair labor practice and that this precipitated the strike. The Federal Circuit Court at Chicago, however, ruled that Fansteel had the right to discharge the workmen.

This decision was appealed to the Supreme Court, which is expected to hand down its opinion in a few weeks.

While argument was in progress yesterday, 39 Fansteel employes who participated in the sit-down and were convicted of contempt by a Lake County, Ill., circuit court, appealed to the high tribunal.

The contempt charges resulted from alleged violations of an injunction against the sit-down strikers.

Swiren contended that the labor board has approved "lynch law" in ordering the men reinstated.

Justices Quiz Fahy

"The purpose of the statutory provision," he added, "is to secure strikers in their status as employes —not to provide them with a cloak of immunity from discharge for proper cause.

"There is no congressional intent that ceasing work in connection with a labor dispute shall confer a license plant seizure, violence or other acts constituting legitimate gorunds for discharge."

Fahy, questioned almost constantly by members of the court, was asked by Justice Stone if an employer who had committeed an "unfair labor practice" could reinstate sit-down strikers and then "discharge them because of the strike."

"If he discharged them after reinstatement," Fahy agreed.

"How long would he have to keep them?" Stone asked. "Is one day sufficient?"

Violated Illinois Law

"I do not think he would have to keep them any prolonged length of time, if that were the sole cause," Fahy replied. "But the question would be whether they were discharged for that, or for union activity."

Chief Justice Hughes asked if there was no conduct, no matter how illegal, which would justify discharge of an employe following an "unfair labor practice" by the employer. Fahy replied:

"That is the scope of my argument."

He said the board was empowered to order reinstatement of employes, following an unfair labor practice by the employer, if that would "effectuate the purposes of the labor act." The board, he added, could not act arbitrarily.

In response to a question by Justice Butler, he said the sit-down at the Fansteel plant was illegal under Illinois law.

Relief Bill, Cut 150 Millions, Passed by House, 399 to 16

tions. A score of other changes were turned back, but a coalition of Republican and Democratic votes forced the six noncommittee amendments past.

Schafer Attacks Communism

Among the defeated amendments was a prohibition of contributions by WPA workers to any organization engaged in either politics or lobbying. Representative Starnes (Democrat), of Alabama, said it was aimed at WPA employes who were members of either the Workers Alliance or the Communist Party. It lost after Representative Ramspeck reminded the House it would apply to workers paying dues to the American Federation of Labor or to any other union.

Another floor attack on Communism was opened by Representative Schafer (Republican), of Wisconsin, but his amendment to prohibit payment of relief funds to strikers lost, 193 to 30.

Other defeated amendments included the mayors' conference amendment to boost the fund to $915,00,000, the Workers Alliance bid for a $1,050,000,000 appropriation, a proposal for a joint House and Senate investigation of relief, an effort to earmark $22,000,000 for the Federal arts project, and an amendment to deny relief to "persons not in need of relief."

The sharpest Democratic split came on the $150,000,000 reduction in the President's estimates. Representative Cannon, of Missouri, ranking member of the committee, led the fight to restore it, citing tertimony by Works Progress Administrator Harrington for the full $875,000,000. He estimated 1,150,000 would be thrown out of work.

Woodrum Charges Exaggeration

This Woodrum, committee sponsor of the slash, flatly denied, charging Cannon with "exaggeration." Actually, Woodrum insisted, the rolls would be trimmed at the rate of 200,000 a month, from 2,800,000 in February to 2,000,000 in June. He insisted this was "generous" provision "in keeping with the humanitarian objectives of the President."

"All along since WPA was first instituted, there have been 10 to 15 million unemployed in America," Woodrum said. "We never have, and we can't now, take care of all of them. We should purge the rolls of the 'squatters' who have been on Federal relief since it first started, and make way for heart-breaking cases that need it."

Majority Leader Rayburn cast his lot with Cannon for the President's full estimates, but only 130 Democrats, 4 Republicans, 2 Progressives and a member of the American Labor Party were observed from the gallery voting for the increase. The Democratic-Republican coalition ld by Woodrum won by an 89-vote margin.

Republicans voted in a body on virtually every minority proposal. Cries of "rubber stamp" once jestingly went up from the Democratic side when 154 Republicans stood in support of the amendment of Representative Taber, of New York, to trim the appropriation to $350,000,000 on a temporary basis. Then 214 Democrats voted solidly against it. Taber offered this again as a motion to recommit, but asked no record vote.

Alien Ban of Little Effect

Tarver's amendment to prevent WPA pay rates for similar work from varying by more than 25 per cent, won 171 to 138, with solid support from the South, where pay scales are lower. Tarver charged WPA wage rates for the same class of work now vary as much as 900 per cent in different sections. It would require a general revision of WPA wage differentials.

The Boren amendment, to deny WPA relief to aliens, passed 144 to 41. Sources close to the WPA said it will make little difference, as the agency is now required by to give first preference to veterans, and second preference to citizens, leaving few if any jobs open now even to aliens who have taken out papers.

Cole said his amendment to prevent political activities among WPA workers was only a "gesture" of protest against past policies, as no political campaign lies ahead. While favoring the objective, Voorhis said the Cole amendment was too broad. He offered his narrower amendment applying the politics ban only to those in supervisory positions so that conferees may choose between the two. The Cole amendment was adopted 164 to 156 and Voorhis' was added by a voice vote.

Cannon Attacks Committee

Under an unusual parliamentary situation, there was no record vote on the $150,000,000 cut. Cannon charged this was arranged by hte committee to keep members from "being put on the spot." Woodrum denied this.

The only record vote came on passage, and but ten Republicans and six Democrats voted against it. Voting "No" were Representatives Smith and Robertson, of Virginia; Representatives Cox, Owen and Peterson, of Georgia, and Representative West, of Texas (Democrats). Republicans voting against were Hawks, of Wisconsin;; Heinke, of Nebraska; Cole, Reed, Boekefeller, Wadsworth and Taber, of New York; Short, of Missouri; Crawford, of Michigan, and McLean, of New Jersey.

19-Ounce Infant at Birth Battles Pneumonia at Year

Virginia Kay Maddrey, who weighed only 19 ounches at birth and now weighs 11 pounds at a year, is held by Nurse Mary Elizabeth Benton at Children's Hospital where the child received the second blood transfusion in a week yesterday in treatment of pneumonia.

Babies weighing 19 ounces at birth seldom survive and when they pass the one year mark they are prize packages to doctors and nurses, which explains why tiny Virginia Kay Maddrey practically owns Children's Hospital today.

Virginia, brought here from her Norfouk home suffering from pneumonia, received her second blood transfusion late yesterday and her condition was pronounced "quite satisfactory" last night. Weighing 11 pounds when she was admitted January 4, she has lost only 2 ounces since then, which doctors said is a hopeful sign.

The blue-eyed patient will be 13 months old next Friday. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Maddrey. She is about the size of a normal baby 4 or 5 months old, yet her gain in weight from 19 ounces to 11 pounds in a year's time was said to be almost phenomel.

Virginia received her first blood transfusion last Wednesday to fight the anemia and other complications arising from premature birth. She came through that operation in good shape and another was ordered for yesterday. Further transfusions probably will be given to build up her strength.

That the child lived even as long as a month is considered remarkable because she was not brought up in an incubator but merely kept swathed in cotton and blankets in a basket placed near an old fashioned coal stove.

Rep. Cravens Dies Here at 67 Of Pneumonia

Veteran Arkansas Legislator Passes in Georgetown Hospital

Representative William Ben Cravens, Democratic veteran from Arkansas, died of pneumonia yesterday morning in Georgetown Hospital, which he entered two weeks ago. He would have been 68 years old on January 17.

Representative Cravens had been ill for many months, and was unable to campaign in the primaries last summer. Despite this he easily defeated two opponents, in the Fourth District of Arkansas, in which is located Fort Smith, his birthplace and home.

"A Fine Character"

A worker especially for farm measures and flood control, the dean of the Arkansas delegation was described by his colleagues yesterday as "a tireless worker for his district and State."

"He was a fine character," said Representative David Terry (Democrat), Arkansas.

Mrs. Cravens was with her husband at the end. Their two children, Fadjo Cravens and Mrs. William Eads, were on their way here yesterday from Fort Smith, where the funeral will be held.

Was Prosecuting Attorney

Cravens was educated in the public schools of Fort Smith and in Louisville (Ky.) Military Academy and Staunton Military Academy. He was graduated in law at the University of Missouri in 1893, and entered practice the same year at his birthplace. Later he became city attorney, and then prosecuting attorney until elected to Congress in 1907.

Serving three terms here, from 1907 to 1913, Cravens was not a candidate for re-election in the latter year. He became a member of the House again in 1933 and had served continuously since.

Funeral Rites Today

Mr. Stephenson had made his home for the past two years with his stepson, Raymond Griffith, 109 Grove avenue, and two weeks ago Griffith was sent to a veterans' hospital for treatment, his wife and children planning to return to their former home in Carthage, Mo. He had been despondent over the change and dependence upon the stepson's wife, and took his life.

No War in '39, Hitler Said to Advise Duce

View Aired as Pope Gives Chamberlain 'Humanitarian' Paper

By the Associated Press

Rome, Jan. 13.—Prime Minister Chamberlain's diplomatic "draw" with Premier Mussolini was thrust into the background momentarily today by reports Hitler advised Il Duce to avoid war during 1939 in seeking to achieve Italy's "natural aspirations" for colonies.

The visiting British Prime Minister, meanwhile, paid a cordial visit to the Vatican, discussing hopes for peace and the refugee problem with Pope Pius XI.

Hitler's views were said to have been conveyed to his axis partner through the German Ambassador to Rome, Hans-Georg Viktor von Mackensen.

Von Mackensen conferred today with Foreign Minister Count Ciano for the second time since Chamberlain arrived Wednesday.

Many who have been watching the development of Fascist claims on France expressed belief Mussolini wanted to keep out of war. Some Italians have said their differences with France could be settled without it.

An Italian communique said the conversations between Chamberlain and Il Duce reaffirmed their intention "to develop relations existing between the two countries in the spirit of friendship" of the British-Italian accord signed last Easter.

It added that both nations intended to pursue a policy directed "toward the effective maintenance of peace."

The British delegation was understood to have approved the Italian announcement which asserted that "major questions of the moment and relations between the two empires" were examined in the conversations which were "marked by the greatest cordiality" and which "led to frank and full exchange of ideas."

British indicated Mussolini told Chamberlain he desired peace without making any commitments to that effect, however.

Il Duce's insistence on "peace with justice" was interpreted to mean he expected France to meet Fascist demands for wider sway in the Mediterranean in some ultimate negotiations.

Foreign Secretary Halifax, who accompanied Chamberlain, told French Ambassador Andre Francois-Poncet there was a general but no detailed discussion of European problems. Franco-Italian differences the Spanish and Jewish questions were included.

Pope Pleased With Visit

Halifax also had a separate interview with United States Ambassador Phillips to communicate results of the Chamberlain-Mussolini talks.

The Italian press campaign against France continued, but for the most part newspapers withheld comment on the outcome of the Anglo-Italian conferences.

Chamberlain smiled broadly as he left the Vatican indicating enjoyment of his visit with the Pope. The Prime Minister and Lord Halifax were accompanied by Francis D'Arcy Osborne, British Minister to the Holy See. The Pope spoke in English and French during most of the audience.

An authoritative source said the Pope read a strong "humanitarian" document, then presented it to Chamberlain in a white silk cover.

Its contents probably will not be disclosed, these informants said, adding, however, that it was "a first rate, humanitarian and Christian statement straight from the shoulder."

The aged pontiff seemed well pleased with the visit.

Chamberlain Applauded

London, Jan. 13 (AP).—Britons of all parties applauded today Prime Minister Chamberlain's apparent firmness in backing France against Italy in Rome and viewed with suspicion Reichsfuehrer Hitler's reported counsel of a year's peace in the Mediterranean.

Paris Sees No Change

Paris, Jan. 13 (AP).—Prime Minister Chamberlain was described by a French government spokesman tonight as having changed "practically nothing" in the delicate line-up of post-Munich Europe through his Rome talks with Premier Mussolini.

pervision and direction of defense positions, such as Panama, which are vital to the defense of the United States, its interests and possessions.

The investigation, it was said, probably should extend to all employes of the Canal Zone administration of eve nthe most insignificant importance and may include member sof the Army itself.

It was emphasized, however, that the checkup is not a spy hunt but is essentially a precautionary measure to provide information for the Canal Zone administration which will prevent foreign agents from sabotaging the canal or interfering with its operation in peace or in war.

Similar efforts may be under way in Hawaii where Maj. Gen. Charles D. Herron is in command, it was stated. While knowledge of such a course has not come to the War Department, the action was deemed logical in view of the tremendous importance of Hawaii to defense of the United States.

Presence in the Canal Zone and Hawaii of large numbers of persons not of American nationality was held to add greatly to the difficulty of securing the two areas against attack from within in the form of sabotage.

On the other hand, it was pointed out, most of the foreign residents of the Canal Zone are engaged in labor not closely associated with defense installations there and their activities cannot be performed by native-born Americans because of the climate.

It was also said that many Government contracts include a clause permitting cancellation of the agreement if foreign citizenships of the contractor or his employes are deemed dangerous to the United States.

States' determination to protect the rights of her citizens.

Difference of Principle

In the new note, Germany calls attention to the United States' contention that it is a fundamental principle here to make no distinction between citizens on the basis of race or creed and contests the right of other countries to apply such discrimination to American citizens.

"Naturally the Government of the United States of America, like any sovereign government," it says, "has a right to set up political principles of one kind or another regarding measures to be adopted within its own country in the questions here involved. It is an entirely different question, however, whether such principles are also legally binding on other governments regarding measures falling within their sovereignty . . .

"There is, however, no general principle in international law according to which a State would be bound to refrain from discriminatory treatment of foreign citizens residing in its country based on race or creed or other characteristics. The American Government is probably aware that the German government is not the first, nor is it the only, government that has considered such differential treatment necessary in specific cases. In no case was it done so, however, on the basis of the foreign citizenship of persons affected; it has applied special measures of the kind in question to certain categories of foreign citizens only when its own citizens of the same categories were likewise subjected to these measures. Beyond that, out of special consideration and where it proved to be technically feasible, the German government even legally conceded more favorable treatment in this connection to foreign citizens than to its own citizens."

To Respect Treaties

Then it says the only remaining question is whether treaty agreements bar application of the decrees to Americans. It adds that "the foreign office has repeatedly declared to the American Embassy, orally and in writing, that the German government would of course respect rights to which American citizens were entitled by virtue of treaties between the two countries. . . . If such cases should be brought to its attention by the American Embassy, the German government for its part is prepared to examine and settle them on the basis of prevailing treaty provisions."

Gilbert last Friday delivered a reply that "my government . . . reiterates its fundamental position that it declines to recognize the right of other nations to apply on their part to American citizens measures which would have the effect of arbitrarily dividing them into special classes and subjecting them to differential treatment on the basis of such classification, irrespective of measures applied by other nations to their own citizens on the basis of differential classification of their own citizens.

Thousands of people who never had seen them bought samples at 7½ rubles a pound—$1.50 at the official exchange rate.

Some years ago a few dozen bananas were rushed by plane from Berlin to save a monkey, ill in a zoo, but arrived to late. This time they came in a 150,000-pound shipment from Colombia.

Hull Agrees To Map Inquiry On Lobbyists

Trade

(Democrat), of Colorado, and O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, that the only sugar "lobbyists" they had seen were bona fide sugar beet raisers or processors who came here at the invitation of the State Department.

Testimony Invited

(The department invited testimony from interested persons on its proposal to revise the Cuban treaty.)

Adams declared, "I don't think these people should be pilloried as lobbyists or the inference left that they are being paid to use their influence."

Hull replied that he alluded only to professional lobbyists who were attempting to undermine and discredit the trade agreements program.

"And," he added vigorously, "I don't intend to sit silent in the midst of all this activity."

O'Mahoney on Defense

O'Mahoney said he thought the Secretary was "condemning the sugar people on the basis that it's a good thing to give a dog a bad name before you hang him."

Hull said he welcomed expressions of opinion from sugar beet growers and processors.

"But," he added, "I can see a few things through the cracks here in Washington and what I am talking about is the professional lobbyists."

O'Mahoney then challenged him to draft legislation for a Congressional investigation of sugar lobbyists.

He'll Draft Bill

"I will if you will include all of the tariff lobbyists," Hull replied. O'Mahoney said that was agreeable to him.

When the hearing adjourned, Hull and O'Mahoney agreed that the Secretary should draft the legislation in the form of an amendment to a resolution introduced by ten Senators.

[The resolution was drafted on the basis of press reports that indicated an agreement had been reached with Cuba on revision of the trade agreement before hearings on proposed changes were announced.

[Secretary Hull yesterday produced various documents, telegrams and statements to disprove the reports. Included was a telegram from Col. Fulgencio Batista, chief of staff of the Cuban army, which said the only accord reached, with reference to the trade agreement, on his recent visit here, was an agreement to study the proposed revision. The other documents were to the same effect. —Editor's note.]

2 Arab Leaders Of Revolt Against British Flee

Jerusalem, Jan. 13 (AP).—Two Arab rebel chieftains fled to Syria today as Britain's military forces apparently broke the back of the Arab revolt after 32 months of almost continuous fighting.

Abdul Rahim Haj Mohammed, commander of Arab forces in the Samaria, Nablus and Jenin districts, went to Damascus, and Aref Razzak, leader of the Jerusalem, Ramallah and Tulkarm areas, took refuge in Beirut, were the exiled grand mufti of Jerusalem fled months ago.

Both leaders had claimed supreme command of Arab resistance to increased Jewish settlement.

Loyalist Chiefs To Quit Capital, French Hear

Ministries to Vacate Barcelona, Declare Advices at Border

By the United Press.

Hendaye, France, Jan. 13.—The loyalist government is planning immediate transfer of ministries from Barcelona to Valencia, it was reported at the frontier tonight as insurgent armies closed in on the seaport of Tarragona and Barcelona's outer defenses.

[However, the Spanish government's central army under Gen. Miaja unleashed a furious attack in the long dormant area west of Madrid in an effort to divert the swiftly moving insurgent drive on Barcelona, the Associated Press said

[The action was in the plains south of Escorial, in the Brunete region, 15 miles west of Madrid, apparently directed southward toward Navalcarnero. The fighting ot under way in icy cold.—Editor's note.]

Loyalists were reported to have urged the dispatch of a French warship to remove government officials if the capital is approached by insurgent armies.

It was reported two loyalist envoys had crossed the border and were en rout eto Paris to ask the French government to insure the safety of the loyalist government of Premier Negrin if it is forced to give up Barcelona.

Extremists Feared

Overland travel to the French frontier, the loyalists said, might lead to capture of the government officials by Catalonian extremists who have threatened to kill any officials attempting to flee from the city.

The Barcelona government is preparing to remove all ministries except those of Premier Negrin, the war office and foreign ministry to Valencia.

Negrin, serving as premier and war minister, will remain in Barcelona to direct a "last ditch" defense of the capital for which 100,000 recruits were called to the colors Thursday.

Companys to Yield

It was understood the cabinet of semi-autonomous Catalonia under President Luis Companys has agreed to cede its power to the Negrin government to enable better resistance.

The government was said to have ordered the evacuation of the region extending from Tarragona to Tortosa and inland to the valley of the Ebro.

Gen. Franco's Moroccan army corps captured Tortosa, 42 miles south of Tarragona, on the estuary of the Ebro, and drove up the Mediterranean coastal highway for 16 miles. The insurgent capture of Valls, Loalist air base 9 miles from Tarragona was announced later.

Loyalists Caved In

The blow crumpled the Loyalist front in lower Catalonia and Moroccan cavalrymen tonight were reported to be only a mile or two from rear-guard units of five Loyalist divisions seeking to escape before Franco's other columns strike to the Mediterranean at Tarragona or Hospitalet. Hospitalet is only 12 miles north of Perello and 20 miles south of Tarragona.

Tarragona, built by the Carthaginians and prize of wars before the time of Christ, was menaced on all sides tonight with the highway north to Barcelona—50 miles away—as the only avenue of escape for its normal population of 28,000, swollen in the last month by thousands of refugees.

Italians Report Capture

To the north Franco's Italian-Navarrese column reported the capture of Lilla Pass and the Sierra Coguilla, 13 miles outside Tarragona. Insurgents were driving upon Valls, until a few days ago a large Loyalist air base.

A second column of Moors under Gen. Juan Yague was only 10 miles from the sea, driving eastward from the captured town of Falset.

Barcelona was threatened by Franco's center column near Tarrega, 52 miles inland from the capital, and the Navarrese and Italian units striking through Lilla Pass 42 miles to the southeast.

at 8 p. m. About half-inch of rain fell during the day.

Rain, snow and sleet fell intermittently during the day at Roanoke with a total precipitation of .75 inch. High temperature was 34 degrees and low 31 with the mercury at 32 at 7 p. m.

F. N. Hibbard, head of the Richmond Weather Bureau, predicted more warm weather for eastern Virginia. He said the first two weeks of January were the warmest ever recorded for the first half of the month.

A steady rain starting about noon in Richmond, continued last night.

A half-inch of sleet fell at Lynchburg during the day, but a light rain melted most of the ice except in sheltered spots. Hard-surfaced roads were slippery, but no accidents were reported. The temperature was slightly above freezing.

Numerous Crashes

Skidding on slushy streets here accounted for numerous traffic crashes and downtown streets were jammed with slow-moving vehicles long after the rush-hour.

An unidentified man, about 55, was the day's most serious casualty. He was found lying on Rhode Island avenue just beyond the District Line in Brentwood, Md., apparently the victim of a hit-and-run driver.

Pvt. R. C. Simms, Prince Georges County policeman, said there was evidence he had been hurled several feet by the striking vehicle. Physicians at Casualty Hospital said he was in a serious condition with head and body injuries. He was well dressed and wore clothes with Baltimore labels.

A second casualty resulting resulting from the cold snap was reported by police after William E. Barham, 35, of 540 Shepherd street northwest, was taken to Gallinger Hospital suffering from exposure and frozen feet. Barham was found in the 2200 block of Channing street northeast and had been wandering around in his bare feet, according to police.

A warning against highway travel through Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania came last night from the Keystone Automobile Club. Although roads are being rapidly cleared, the club reported, travel in many places is "exceedingly hazardous."

Virtually all air traffic in and out of Washington was at a standstill yesterday, although one plane from the south landed with more than a half inch of ice on the wings.

Extra workers were called out by both the District street cleaning department and the Capital Transit Co. to clear the 3-inch snow layer from downtown streets. Residents in outlying sections were cautioned against piling snow in the gutters for fear of overloading the sewage system.

Scraped fenders and minor dents constituted the most serious damage in nearly two-score traffic mishaps. A bus, empty of passengers, overturned on Fort drive near Wilson boulevard in Arlington County, but the driver, B. T. Harlow, escaped with a shaping up.

Police announced that youngsters may enjoy sledding on 34 roped-off streets. The sledding sites will be protected by extra police details, said Maj. Ernest W. Brown.

Meanwhile, the Weather Bureau warned Atlantic shipping, from Boston to Cape Hatteras, N. C., to beware of gales now brewing. The following storm warning was issued:

"Advisory southeast storm warnings ordered 2 p. m. Cape Hatteras to Delaware Breakwater and northeast storm warnings north of Delaware Breakwater to Boston, Mass.

"Disturbance of wide extent central noon over eastern Kentucky and a secondary apparently developing over Georgia will move northeastward and will be attended by increasing east or southeast winds Hatteras to Delaware Breakwater, probably reaching gale force tonight and increasing northeast or east winds north of Delaware Breakwater becoming strong probably reaching gale force late tonight."

clerk, said he recently was ordered to check the jail list and noticed McManus' hearing had not been held. He asked Assistant District Attorney Goldstein about it.

Goldstein checked up on the District Court proceedings and nolle prossed the Police Court case, to clear his records. This was regular procedure, he explained. Judge Newman then signed the release and McManus walked out.

He did not stop to ask why or how but left at once and has not been seen since. Assistant District Attorney Jackson ordered him picked up as soon as he heard about it Wednesday night.

Capt. Thomas H. Rives, jail superintendent, explained yesterday: "We released McManus because the court that committed him ordered us to. There was nothing else we could do. We had no commitment from District court."

William S. Adkins, deputy clerk for criminal court, said: "We never send commitments unless the jail asks for them. We send a list of the indictments to notify the jail the men are accused in District court."

Rives said he got the list but did not regard it as notice.

District Attorney Pine announced "a preliminary inquiry does not indicate that there was any irregularity requiring attention by the United States attorney's office."

Having tentatively determined there was nothing to prosecute, Pine and his associates refrained from entering the dispute between authorities responsible for custody of prisoners.

6 Governors Join in Fight For State Rights

Warn Roosevelt They Will Not Yield Land For Flood Control

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Jan. 13.—A united front against "surrender" of State's rights in a controversy over flood control was formed today by New England's bloc of six Governors, solidly Republican for the first time in eight years.

Their States, hard hit by devastating floods in recent years, the chief executives demanded Federal flood-control co-operation, but served notice they would not yield in their fight to prevent the Federal Government from taking over "basic rights which belong to the people in the States."

Their stand—an indication they may seek to act as a unit on other common questions in the future—came just a day after the Vermont Legislature appropriated at $67,000 "war chest" to fight what the Green Mountain State's outspoken Governor, George D. Aiken, assailed as the Federal Government's desire for "domination" in flood-control matters.

The Governors—Aiken, Barrows of Maine, Baldwin of Connecticut, Murphy of New Hampshire, Saltonstall of Massachusetts, and Vanderbilt of Rhode Island—ordered copies of their resolution sent to President Roosevelt and Secretary of War Woodring.

"We believe," the resolution said, "that the natural resources of all the States belong to the people therein and that they should not be taken away without the consent of the States acting through the duly chosen representatives of the people."

The nub of the controversy was that Aiken termed the "unjust" Barkley flood control amendment which provides for land-taking by the Federal Government.

"It's a matter of the Federal Government taking whatever resources it chooses, whenever it chooses," said Aiken.

"If the Federal Government is allowed to take land in Vermont without consent of the State, it could take oil wells in Texas and coal fields in West Virginia in the same manner."

And back in Vermont, meanwhile, a Democratic legislator sarcastically called for passage of another $67,500 appropriation to purchase "blunderbusses" for defense against the "mounted minions of the alien Federal Government."

Warrants for arrest of 200 business and professional persons operating without business privilege licenses have been issued by the corporation counsel, it was disclosed yesterday.

Officials said an additional 200 would be served with warrants by next week.

Most of the violators, it was explained, were refused licenses on the grounds they had failed to pay the previous year's business privilege tax. They are liable to fines of $300 for each day after July 1 they operated without licenses.

Music Teacher Combats Jazz Here

An effort to offset the influence of jazz music and what he calls its "natural" effect in causing pupils in the schools to take up horns and the cornet instead of stringed instruments, led to two demonstrations by a beginners' class in instrumental music at Gordon Junior High School yesterday noon, according to Don P. McAdoo, instructor in music at the school.

Forty children who have been taught in school hours, instead of as in former years after school at the community center, participated in the demonstrations in the school auditorium at 12 and 12:45 o'clock. While instruments played by beginners included four cellos and one string bass, the violin section was borrowed from the school orchestra.

The beginning pupils played eight cornets, five clarinets, one saxophone, one flute, two trombones, one baritone, one tuba and two alto horns besides the stringed instruments.

Inclusion of the last instruments was considered important by McAdoo because it represents a start on building up a supply of string players for the Inter-High School Orchestra, of which he is director as well as being instructor at Western High School and Gordon.

Situated on the site of Fort Stevens where, in 1864, the Confederates made their only effort to pass the fortifications ringing the Nation's Capital, the church is named after John Emory, born in Queen Anne County in 1789, and made Bishop in 1932.

The first services were held in a log-frame building a few yards from the present site. Brightwood's first school met in the structure, where combined educational and religious services were held.

From 1856 to 1861 services were held in a brick chapel, but during the Civil War unsettled conditions necessitated meeting in homes of the neighborhood.

In 1867 a stone chapel was erected, which served until 1922, when the cornerstone of the present building was laid. Dr. F. J. Prettyman, now pastor emeritus of Emory, was a moving spirit behind the new building, and during his pastorate served as chaplain of the United States Senate. Dr. Cromer came in 1935.

Church of the Week

St. Thomas More Church to Build $100,000 Home, Says Rev. Lee

From this humble beginning the Catholic Church of St. Thomas More, in Arlington County, expects to expand within the next three years into a 5-unit, $100,000 development. This chapel, completed December 2, will eventually become a parochial school.

Recently Established Parish Expected to Become One of Largest

St Thomas More Catholic Church expects to build a $100,000 home in Buckingham, Arlington County, within three years, the Rev. Edward J. Lee, recently named first rector, announced last night.

To be located at Thomas street, one black west of North Glebe road, the project will contain five units, including the church, which will face Lee Boulevard, the rectory, church school, convent and elementary school. The latter unit, now partially completed, is being used as a temporary church. All buildings will be in Tudor style, of brick construction.

Organized a few months ago under the leadership of the Very Rev. Thomas E. Rankin, of the Richmond diocese, the congregation, because of its strategic location and possibilities for expansion, is expected to develop into one of the largest parishes in this area, according to the Rev. Mr. Lee, who served for 12 years as assistant rector of the Sacred Heart Cathedral, Richmond.

Rev. Mr. LEE (Pastor)

Educated at Mount Saint Mary's, Emmittsburg, Md., the Rev. Mr. Lee served for some time as assistant rector at Old Point Comfort and was very active in Diocesan Laymen's Retreat work.

While necessarily small at present, the congregation is standing solidly behind the rector in his efforts to build a parish, and to that end ladies of the church met recently at the rectory to organize committees and other lay societies.

Among those appointed were Mrs. F. H. Rivers, general chairman; Mrs. J. Martin Hicks, vice chairman; Mrs. William P. Hall, secretary; Mrs. Genevieve E. Labram, contact officer, and Mrs. Neil Keefe, assistant contact officer.

Mrs. Evelyn Horovitz, 628 South Highland street, heads the Sanctuary Society, consisting of Mesdames R. H. Murphy, Josephine Dunn, Mabel Dougherty and P. J. Healy.

Named to the Baptismal Society were Mrs. N. L. Mayer, 704 South Taylor street, chairman; Mesdames Josephine Dunn, Mary J. Dunn and C. F. Pollock. The publicity will be handled by Mrs. Joseph Dugan, Helen O. Ballard, Mrs. H. L. Crammer and Mrs. Mary Miller. Mrs. Kate A. Keating has been appointed organist.

Church Unit to Present 'Hoofs and Halos of '39'

Songs, dances, skits, a mixed chorus and a male fashion show are scheduled as features of "Hoofs and Halos of 1939," an entertainment to be presented by the Rector's Aid, Circle No. 3, of All Saints' Episcopal Church next Wednesday at 8 p. m.

Associated Gas Faces Delisting Of Securities

Hundreds of Millions Involved in SEC Charge Of 'False' Statements

Charging overstatement of property value, income and earned surplus of the Associated Gas & Electric Co. system, the Securities and Exchange Commission yesterday ordered a public hearing February 14 to determine whether stock exchanges should be barred from handling transactions in the company's stocks.

The proceeding is one of many by the commission involving the utility holding system whose assets are set at $1,036,000,000. A number of proceedings still are pending.

The complaint against the company is that registration statements covering its common and class A stocks, and annual reports for the years 1935, 1936 and 1937, contain statements which are "false and misleading with respect to material facts."

Transamerica Hearing Monday

The registration statements, which contain financial reports both for the company individually and for the system for 1934, overstate the worth of the system's property by more than $170,000,000, its income by $2,825,000 and its earned surplus by more than $135,000,000, the SEC contends.

The hearing will be before Trial Examiner William W. Swift.

The proceeding is one of the major stock delisting moves made by the commission in the four and one-half years of its history. Another important action is the hearing, scheduled to begin Monday, to determine whether stock of the Transamerica Corporation, Giannini-controlled bank holding company, shall be delisted.

Contrlo Not Disclosed

The Associated Gas & Electric Co., in a statement issued in New York, expressed belief that all the questions raised in the commission proceeding "can be answered satisfactorily."

Other main charges made by the commission against the company follow:

That the company faile dto disclose its relationship to persons controlling it.

That it failed to furnish required information concerning remuneration paid to management or service companies, attorneys, accountants and others.

Hopson Reported Ill

That the company listed in its income credits for interest and dividends which which subsidiaries had not actually paid.

That financial statements had not been certified in accordance with commission requirement.

Howard C. Hopson, New Yorker credited with controlling the company, was reported yesterday to be seriously ill. At a commission hearing some weeks ago he refused to answer many questions put to him o nthe ground that, as counsel for the company, he had a confidential relationship to his client.

Western Union Sued for $50,000 By Pedestrian

Daniel A. McDougal sued the Western Union Telegraph Co. in District court yesterday for $50,000 damages.

McDougal asserted, through Attorneys Edmund L. Jones and Elizabeth M. Cox, that he was struck down last June at Seventeenth street and Connecticut avenue northwest by a bicycle owned by the company.

Saying he had been in a hospital for four months as the result of his injuries, McDougal alleged he had spent $3,000 for nurses, medicine and medical attention, and "in the future will be compelled to lay out and expend large sums of money . . . to be healed and cured of his injuries."

McDougal, whose address is 1028 Connecticut avenue northwest, asked that the case be tried by a jury.

Dakota Blast Slayer Given Life Sentence

Sioux Falls, S. Dak., Jan. 13 (AP).—Leland "Lee" Bradley, former convict and confessed slayer of Floyd Parker in the powderhouse blast slaying here two years ago, pleaded guilty to charge of first degree murder today and was sentenced to life imprisonment.

Bradley is the third to be sentenced in connection with the crime. William Nesbeth, Sioux City, drew a life term after he was convicted on a murder charge here in May, 1937, and Harry "Slim" Reeves, Sioux City, is serving a 40-year term in an Iowa prison after pleading guilty to a burglary which preceded Parker's death.

The State Department was informed yesterday that an American consul had joined in efforts to locate Milo Webb, United States citizen, believed to have been kidnaped in Mexico. Webb, of Phoenix, Ariz., was superintendent of El Monte Mine, near Gaunajuato.

Edmund Montgomery, consul at San Luis Potosi, reported he was leaving immediately to co-operate with local authorities in finding Webb.

Attempt to Break Alcatraz Sends Bennett to Coast in Ire

officials because, whereas Roe and Cole broke away from a machine shop, "Doc" Barker and his desperate pals got out of the cell block, or prison proper.

Arthur (Doc) Barker, last of the Barker family famous in crime history, died of gunshot wounds, another prisoner was shot and a third was injured in a fall during the break.

A high Department of Justice official, confessing his astonishment at what happened, describing what the men had to do to get as far as they did.

"I have visited the prison," he said, "and can picture it for you. These five prisoners, like all of the 300 prisoners, were in individual cells. There are three tiers of these cells.

"The tiers of cells are about 20 feet from the wall of the building itself. First these men had to saw through the bars of their cells, and then they had to saw through the bars of a window to get outside."

The incredible thing was, he said, that five men could have been able to do this at the same time.

How Did Saws Get There

He smiled when he told of the "tool-proof" steel bars, supposedly nonresistable even to the sharpest saw. But this was not so incredible to him as the circumstance that the saws got into the prison. In coming and going into the cell block, he explained, each prisoner must pass through the gun detector. A green light here wavers if a prisoner is carrying a small piece of metal, he said, and describes an arc if the object is larger.

Director Bennett, of the Federal Prison Bureau, left here at 5:10 p. m. yesterday for San Francisco.

James A. Johnston, mild-mannered warden of Alcatraz, told the Associated Press yesterday that "Doc" Barker and the other four would-be fugitives planned to swim for the mainland once they were over the cliff. Rather, they hoped to catch pieces of the driftwood that abounds in the bay and make their way in the heavy fog.

They were fleeing toward the water when guards discovered them and started shooting.

Barker, gang leader and kidnaper, son of the infamous "Ma" Barker and a crony of Alvin Karpis, was shot through the head and leg when he ignored a command to halt. He died last night.

Dale Barker, 27, Oklahoma kidnaper, was shot through both legs. The other three fugitives surrendered. They were William McCain, 36, a kidnaper; Henri Young, 28, a bank robber, and William Martin, 25, colored, a postoffice robber.

Prisoner Martin came nearest to making his getaway. He had slid down the rocky northwest side of the island and was collecting pieces of driftwood and tying them together, when he was ordered to halt.

Felons Watch Driftwood

Warden Johnston has always expressed the belief that the two prisoners who made their break a year ago last month—Roe and Cole—were drowned in the bay. It is apparent now, however, that the other inmates of Alcatraz have thought otherwise; that they have watched the driftwood flowing past their island and have dreamed of using it to make their escape.

"There is driftwood all the time," Johnston told the Associated Press in San Francisco, and the correspondent gave a word picture of the logs, boxes, old masts and other flotsam that move along with the tide.

Apparently Barker and the others waited for a heavy fog, and the fact that it arrived on a Friday the 13th did not deter them.

To Warden Johnston, as well as to other officials, the question of how the prisoners got the saws remained a mystery. Johnston said that the prisoners were permitted no direct contacts with anyone from the outside. The saws were not found.

The steel bars through which they had to saw were each about three-quarters of an inch in diameter.

"It must have taken them a long time," said Warden Johnston.

"Doc" Barker, serving a life sentence for his part in the $200,000 kidnaping of Edward G. Bremer, St. Paul, Minn., banker, was captured as the result of an impressive piece of detective work by G-men. Bremer remembered that the kidnapers had used gasoline cans for refueling several times. G-men found four cans, and these were sent here to the technical laboratory of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. A latent fingerprint was found, and it matched the prints on file of Barker. He was later arrested in Chicago.

Barker's mother, known in the underworld as "Ma," and his brother, Fred, were killed in a gun battle with G-men at Lake Weir, Fla.

"Old Creepy" Karpis, another leader in the Bremer kidnaping, was captured in New Orleans by G-men led by Director J. Edgar Hoover. Karpis had threatened to kill Hoover. Karpis, too, is in Alcatraz.

and crime prevention figure in America in the last 15 years."

Dr. Albert Shaw, editor of Review of Reviews Magazine, in December, 1922, referred to Lewis as "a notable example of that new type of technically trained official, the need of which is becoming better recognized every year."

On September 10, 1934, Street wrote to Lewis that he was "one of thel eading candidates for the position" and he would like to have the penal committee meet him.

Meanwhile, Frederick W. McReynolds, chairman of the Board of Public Welfare, declared he still had not received data compiled by Lewis' staff regarding fraud and "chiseling" among District relief clients, although he had recently written Representative Collins (Democrat), of Mississippi, chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee on District appropriations, and Senator Overton (Democrat), Louisiana, chairman of the corresponding Senate committee, for the information.

He received a letter from Collins explaining that he would be given a chance to be heard by the House subcommittee when the District relief appropriation for the coming fiscal year is taken up.

Replying to a demand by Lewis that he apologize to his staff for certain recent statements, McReynolds said: "If anybody will show me something I said that I should apologize for, I will be glad to do it."

Business Spurt Slows Down to Steady Climb

Rise in Last 6 Months About Fastest for Healthy Conditions

The rise in industrial output slowed down decidedly last month, indicating 1939 may be a year of more gradual and less spectacular business improvement, the Federal Reserve Board revealed yesterday.

Industrial production, the board announced, was about 104 per cent of the 1923-25 average in December as compared with 103 per cent in November. Changes in business activity were "largely of a seasonal nature."

This indicated that the industrial production index, which climbed rapidly in the late summer and fall from a midsummer level of 77, was tapering off, or at least "catching its breath" before resuming the rise.

Department Store Sales Up

"Employment and payrolls," however, the board explained, "appear to have increased further from the middle of November to the middle of December.

"Department store sales, which earlier in the year were continuously lower than in 1937, exceeded last year's volume during the Christmas holiday trade."

The sharp gains in industrial production in the fall increased the average for 1938 to 86 per cent of the 1923-25 average as compared with 110 per cent for 1937.

Expansion in production from June to December was about the fastest in the country's history for healthy business activity, experts said.

Builder Bows To Zoning Board

The District building inspector's office revealed yesterday Mrs. Madeline Savage, whose appeal to be permitted to complete construction of a two-story addition to her home was denied by the Board of Zoning Adjustment recently, has applied for permission to rebuild the addition.

District officials stopped the building because of an infraction of zoning regulations when the addition was 90 per cent complete. The dwelling is located in the 1400 block of Massachusetts avenue southeast.

Wage-Hour Rules For Minors Extended

The Children's Bureau of the Labor Department extended yesterday until April 24 a temporary regulation which allows minors to be employed under the wage-hour law.

Under the regulation, children between 14 and 16 who come within the child labor provisions of the act may be employed in occupations other than manufacturing, mining, motor vehicle delivery or messenger service. Such employment must not conflict with school hours.

Murphy Reveals Ultimatum to John Lewis Signaled End of 1937 Sit-Down Strike sit-downers to evacuate General Motors' property.

Murphy

Feared Riot, Bloodshed

"I did not ignore the writ," he told the committee. "On the contrary, I warned the union representatives that I would enforce it."

"But I knew . . . that the literal enforcement of the writ at that moment would not only disrupt negotiations, but could not be carried out without the gravest risk of property damage, riot and even bloodshed, which would leave bitterness and ill-feeling between the company and the men for years to come."

That he did warn the union—in the person of Lewis — Murphy proved by presenting to the committee a hitherto unpublished letter, which he declared he read to Lewis and James G. Dewey, Labor Department conciliator, on Tuesday night, February 9, 1937, when week-long negotiations to settle the Flint sit-down threatened to collapse.

The letter, couched in courteous terms, told Lewis that "the time has come for all concerned to comply fully with the decision and order of the court and take necessary steps to restore possession of the occupied plants to their rightful owners. . . . I am sure that you and your associates will agree with me that the law should be observed and there should be no wilful disobedience of the court's orders or defiance of the public authority."

Murphy's letter continued: "It is not the function of the Governor to make the laws, nor is it his prerogative to review the action of the courts and determine for himself their meaning and effect. As the chief executive, it is his duty to demand and require obedience to them on the part of everybody.

"I shall exhaust every means to obtain such obedience peacefully, but I must and will be faithful to my oath of office. In the performance of my duty I shall expect the full assistance and co-operation of the members and responsible leaders of the United Automobile Workers' Union, believing that they share with me and the people of this State a strong desire to avoid further unnecessary injury either to persons or to property."

The former Governor told the Senate subcommittee he warned Lewis that if the plants were not vacated, he would make the letter public. "That was not necessary," he said, "because the strike was settled the next day."

Inasmuch as his alleged partiality toward the sit-downers frequently has been given as one cause of defeat in his reelection campaign last November, Murphy was asked last night why he had not used his letter to Lewis in the campaign.

"The important thing," he replied in an interview with The Post, "was that, as long as I was Governor, I should be in a position to mediate labor disputes. You just can't maintain the confidence of both sides if you get into a controversy.

"I acted as a mediator right up to the end of my term for, as recently as December 16, what might have been a very serious strike broke out in certain automobile plants. We were able to settle it, however.

"I think a public official has to be accessible to both sides and never say or do anything that might make either side lose confidence in him. There was no point in making that letter public while I was Governor—except in defense of myself personally. And my personal fortunes are a secondary matter."

At the hearing, Murphy produced for the record a letter from Harry H. Bennett, personnel director of the Ford Motor Co., congratulating him on his appointment as Attorney General.

Describing the former Governor as "a man who completely comprehends the requirements of employe and employer," Bennett wrote that "we personally have always felt that your actions were guided and prompted by a spirit of fairness and justice."

Roosevelt Wired Thanks

Murphy also read a telegram he had received from President Roosevelt at the time the sit-downs were settled. "Yours has been a high public service nobly performed, for which I desire to express the thanks for the Nation," wierd the President. Other testimonials to Murphy's fairness were attributed to former Secretary of War Newton D. Baker, Alfred Sloan, head of General Motors; Felix Frankfurter, and to two Detroit newspapers.

Murphy described to the committee the difficult labor situation in Michigan when he took office on the first day of 1937. The auto unions, he said, were new and not yet accustomed to discipline—"and there was no operating legal machinery for settling labor disputes; the Wagner Act was at that time practically out of operation under decisions of lower Federal courts."

"Of course" the sit-downers were "guilty of violating the law," said Murphy with emphasis. "Their conduct was unlawful and unjustified. But in their own minds they believed that they were only defending their own rights against what they believed to be the lawless refusal of their employers to recognize their unions."

Murphy Asked Rehearing

Asserting that "the ultimate purpose of all laws" is "to preserve public order and insure public safety," Murphy said that "to have executed the laws in a manner calculated to cause further breach thereof, further disorders and even riot and bloodshed would have been false to my oath of office and to the law."

"I think I prevented some strikes; know settled many. I am not saying that later developments were not sometimes disappointing to my hopes that industrial peace had been permanently achieved. But I do feel sure that the sit-down strike has now been thoroughly discredited and I believe we have seen the end of it."

A series of questions addressed to Murphy by Representative Hoffman, Michigan Republican and bitter critic of the former Governor, were held by Senator Austin (Republican), of Vermon, to have been adequately "covered" by Murphy's statement to the committee.

Murphy said that he requested the subcommittee hearing because he "didn't want to take office under any cloud." He said he had hoped the committee members would question him in detail about his policies in the sit-downs, because he felt his position had been widely misrepresented. However, Murphy was disappointed in that desire, as questioning was brief and almost perfunctory. The entire hearing took less than an hour.

Wheat Conference

The prospective world wheat conference of 1939 represents the completion of an economic cycle. Apparently all of the major wheat-producing countries are sick of export subsidies and eager to try a more rational means of handling their surplus problems. For they have come face to face with the fact that export bounties are draining their treasuries to no purpose whatever.

Wheat surpluses have been a problem for a good many years. But the chief exporting countries have not heretofore been favorably disposed toward restrictions. Each has been inclined to think that its position might be improved if it stimulated exports by granting subsidies. But use of such artificial stimulants spread rapidly from one country to another. Under these circumstances, special advantages are quickly lost and the net effect is to ship abroad the "staff of life" at prices below its cost of production.

From this viewpoint the United States is entitled to a large measure of credit for the unanimous recommendation of the Wheat Advisory Committee that an international conference be held with the object of controlling exports and restricting production. For this country was the last of the great wheat producers to resort to export subsidies. And its program of dumping wheat abroad was adopted largely as a means of proving to other countries that the United States does not intend to withdraw from the world market because other nations employ unfair trade methods.

No doubt there will be many difficulties to overcome at the prospective conference. If the participating governments are eager for an agreement they will make far more elaborate preparations than they did for the London Wheat Conference in 1933. As Vincent Massey, Canadian High Commissioner in London, has pointed out, "an abortive conference would do more harm than good."

Restriction of exports is not an easy task in any circumstances. But each country ought to recognize the fact that wheat is now being sold abroad at substantial losses, with the result that tariff barriers move higher and higher in wheat-consuming countries which insist upon producing a large part of their own grains for reasons of national defense. Everyone is losing by this absurd competition in virtually giving away wheat that only a few countries care to accept.

If the conference is intelligently guided, this situation alone should lead to concessions from every major wheat-producing country in the interests of general stability.

Progress In Housing

The Federal Housing Administration reports a 45 per cent increase in the value of mortgages accepted for insurance during 1938 and a 71 per cent increase in the value of small-home mortgages accepted for appraisal. At the end of December the total amount of mortgage insurance written by the FHA amounted to $2,096,000,000, of which $1,300,000,000 reprsented insurance on small-home mortgages.

This is an encouraging record, testifying to the stimulative effect upon private residential construction of the liberalized provisions of the Federal housing act. If the campaign to speed construction of small homes is to meet expectations, however, it is essential that the costs of building be further reduced so as to provide homes within the means of families in comparatively low and medium income groups.

The Advisory Board of the Producers Council—an organization representing large concerns producing materials and equipment for the construction industry—has been meeting this week in New York to discuss the launching of a home building campaign with the support and encouragement of the FHA. Standardization of equipment and design is said to be one of the main objectives of this drive, because simplified design makes for cheaper construction and easier financing. It is worth noting that the FHA has been devoting particular attention to the problem of reducing costs during the past year and has been notably successful in its efforts along that line.

With the private construction industry and private lending agencies showing an increased eagerness to co-operate in plans for a renascence of building, it remains for labor to manifest an equally co-operative attitude. Unreasonable demands that would tend to raise labor costs unduly and offset the stimulative effect of efforts to reduce costs in other directions might easily put a brake upon progress and destroy hopes of bringing new homes within the reach of families of limited means.

The Parley At Rome

Two years ago the Italian and British governments signed a declaration in which each disclaimed "any desire to modify or, so far as they are concerned, to see modified the status quo as regards national sovereignty of territory in the Mediterranean area." This declaration, it was announced, "is designed to further the ends of peace."

The ink on this agreement was hardly dry before Mussolini violated its spirit by permitting the dispatch of large reinforcements of Italian "volunteers" to Spain. Nevertheless, its terms have never been formally abrogated. On the contrary, the more comprehensive Anglo-Italian pact of last April contained a reaffirmation of the declaration of January 2, 1937.

It is in the light of this pledge that the success or failure of Neville Chamberlain's visit to Rome this week will be judged. If Mussolini has been persuaded to refrain from any direct or indirect assaults on the Mediterranean status quo, Chamberlain can return to London with the assurance that his appeasement policy has made progress and that Italy, like Great Britain, is still anxious only "to further the ends of peace." By the same token, failure to obtain confirmation from Mussolini would mean to Chamberlain a failure of the appeasement policy, so far as Italy is concerned.

Precisely what happened at the meeting of the British and Italian premiers has not been revealed. It is significant, however, that the Chamberlain visit resulted in no public reaffirmation by Mussolini of his intention to maintain the status quo in the Mediterranean and no formal abandonment of Italy's semi-official demands for French territory. Indeed, from Paris comes the report that in his conversations with Chamberlain, the Duce refused to "retreat one inch" from Fascist colonial claims, disruptive though these would be of the status quo in the Mediterranean.

If Mussolini is determined to provoke the French then the Chamberlain visit, as a voyage of appeasement, must be marked down as a failure. What is more important, however, is that if a failure it may prove a turning point, not only in Anglo-Italian relations but more particularly in the relations between the totalitarian and the democratic powers of Europe. When appeasement fails, resistance will take its place.

At Rome, Mr. Chamberlain obviously did not practice the kind of appeasement manifested by him at Munich last September. He did not this time, in the name of peace, offer Mussolini anything beyond what had already been conceded. He evidently turned down the Italian demand for the extension by Great Britain and France of belligerent rights to Gen. Franco, insisting instead, reports have it, that such a development could only follow a more substantial withdrawal of Italian volunteers from Spain. But this Mussolini refuses to countenance until after Franco has won a definitive victory.

While that victory is not yet assured, the successful drive of the nationalists toward Barcelona has brought it perceptibly nearer. To be sure, the doom of the loyalists has frequently been sounded during the past 30 months. The remarkable powers of resistance they have displayed hitherto may again overcome heavy odds to hold Franco in check. But with insurgent prospects better than ever before, Mussolini is clearly in no mood to weaken Franco by withdrawing Italian troops and material from Spain at this time.

It is, perhaps, too early to talk of an abandonment by Chamberlain of his policy of appeasement. But this policy cannot continue very much longer if all the concessions are to be made by the democracies. In this connection the report from Rome that Hitler has interceded with Mussolini to get the latter to postpone for one year all efforts to fulfill his colonial program is easy to believe. A stiffening of the Anglo-French attitude toward the dictators is far from Hitler's desire. He has much more to gain than to lose by keeping on good terms with Chamberlain, even if that means curbing Mussolini.

Too Long A Wait

An almost universal complaint against unemployment compensation systems in this country is that they operate too slowly. In some cases loose administration appears to be the chief cause of delay in paying benefits. In the District of Columbia, however, it appears to be the law itself which is at fault.

According to John Marshall, director of the District Unemployment Compensation Board, payments here are current with the law. But the act requires a waiting period of three weeks after a man loses his job before he is entitled to any insurance benefits. The board has then to wait another week to see whether the prospective beneficiary has earned anything during his fourth week out of a job. Complicated methods of calculating his unemployment compensation cause still further delay.

So it is virtually impossible to extend any aid to the jobless until their pay checks have been cut off six weeks or more. A great many families lack the resources to tide them over such a period. The board should have no difficulty in convincing Congress as well as local officials of the necessity of an amendment to shorten this unreasonable time lag.

Various other changes suggested by the board appear to be equally constructive. It is obviously trying to simplify the unemployment compensation act and make it more workable. Fortunately these amendments come directly from the board itself. For that agency, better than any other, is in a position to know the weaknesses of the law as it now stands.

Changes thus far suggested by the board deal chiefly with administration of the act. It is understood that it will later recommend modification of certain policies which tend to work injustice on some jobless persons. For example, if a worker accumulates benefits here and takes a job outside of the District before they are paid he forfeits his right to compensation. Aside from the injustice of such a provision, it tends to penalize enterprising individuals who are not content to wait for jobs to come to them.

In paying earned compensation to persons moving to other jurisdictions numerous precautions would have to be taken. Aimless wandering should be discouraged. And some means of checking on the beneficiaries' earnings in other cities would have to be adopted. It may be a difficult problem to solve. But that does not make it desirable to deny a person benefits to which he is entitled merely because he finds employment outside of the District.

Vermont's Protest

On the eve of adjournment of the last session of Congress the Senate approved an amendment to the flood-control bill which specifically empowered the Federal Government to take title, without the consent of the State affected, to lands desired for the construction of dams and reservoirs.

Senators from New England and from the Western States vigorously fought this amendment, pointing out that it overruled the policy approved under the flood-control act of 1936. This provided that property should not be condemned without the consent of the States concerned. Such arguments were of no avail and the measure was rushed to passage with only a few people realizing the significance of a controversial amendment which carried the "must" label of the Administration.

Indeed, the one feature of the flood-control act to which President Roosevelt gave unrestrained approval was this very amendment which the Governors of the six New England States are now preparing to fight as a challenge to States' rights and an invasion of State sovereignty. An illuminating light is thrown upon the underlying purpose of this amendment by the President's comment at the time of signing the bill: "Insofar as this bill provides for an improvement in jurisdictional control over the properties involved, and a more adequate control over consequential power developments, it is a definite step in the right direction."

In leading the opposition to this far-reaching encroachment on the States, Gov. Aiken of Vermont shows that he is not hostile to the Federal Government's power program. Neither does he oppose flood control. On the contrary the State of Vermont has demonstrated its willingness to co-operate with the Federal authorities in carrying out their program in accordance with the terms of an agreement which Secretary Woodring has set aside. The issue, as Gov. Aiken sees it, is "simply and solely the insistence of the Federal Government that it can take from us what it chooses, without any regard at all for our wishes or our rights."

Flood control is obviously a national problem, but it does not follow that effective control of flood waters requires a centralization of power which would deprive the States of all voice in determining how such projects shall be developed. The States and their subdivisions have a very great stake in these undertakings and they are entitled to participate in deliberations on matters that vitally concern them.

Vermont's Governor has made it clear that he has no desire to obstruct the Federal Government in carrying out programs that are a matter of interstate and national concern. All he seeks to determine is whether the State has certain rights reserved to it under the Constitution which the Federal Government must respect. And even if the courts were to uphold the right of the Federal authorities to proceed with their flood-control program in Vermont without seeking the approval of the State, the method would still be open to condemnation. For it does violence to the basic principles upon which our Federal form of government is founded.

The obvious and the best solution of the controversy lies in repeal of the offending amendment and a return to the policies outlined under the flood-control act of 1936.

Government for D. C.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "The Kissling Plan," providing a District of Columbia representative rule, calls for a people's secretary for the District of Columbia. In addition to granting District of Columbia citizens voting suffrage and representation in the Senate and House, a local government setup—wholly divorced from the National Congress—should provide the District people a representative rule and body of District of Columbia officials something as follows:

A chief administrator to be known and to serve in the capacity of the people's representative secretary (people's secretary, merely to shorten the official title), who would have and be delegated duties and powers similar to those of a State governor or city mayor.

And to advise and assist this proposed people's secretary in the affairs of the District of Columbia, the Kissling plan's author also suggests that a body of, let us say, nine District of Columbia assemblymen be popularly elected. Note: The District could be divided into four or five wards or sections as Northwest wards 1 and 2; Southwest, ward 3; Southeast, ward 4; Northeast, ward 5; each ward getting one assemblyman while the remaining four assemblymen would be selected at large from the District citizenry. Author's note: These nine District of Columbia assemblymen or councilmen would serve in a similar capacity as State representatives or city assemblymen.

Finally: The Federally owned property located within the District of Columbia, as the Capitol, Senate and House Office buildings and other Government buildings, parks, etc., would be looked after by a somewhat similar arrangement to that which now obtains—plus, of course, the attention of the District of Columbia representation in Congress, who severally would be elected on the basis of their knowledge and interest in the mutual affairs, property, etc., of the local and national governments.

Skunk And Polecats

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I do not believe I am the first to admonish you on the following subject: That you have avoided a great deal of news dealing with the Spanish loyalists' atrocities in Spain. (1) the countless murders and outrages of bishops, priests and nuns by them. (2) The burning of undreds of churches and religious buildings by them. (3) The fact that the so-called Spanish loyalists are not the true Spanish loalists, but are imposters who have overthrown the original republic, and are communists, directly under the control of Soviet Russia. (4) That they have and are receiving innumerable shipments of war material from Soviet Russia, Mexico, France, Czecho-Slovakia and other communistically controlled or influenced countries. (5) That many organizations in the United States of America are controlled or influenced by communists and that propaganda is spread by these organizations to support the loyalists and to defeat the nationalists.

I am not in sympathy with Hitler or Mussolini; in fact, I am just as opposed to their attitude toward the Jews as the Jews are themselves. I stand with the Protestant and Catholic organizations in their condemnation of Fascist or Nazi persecution of Jewry. But, I do not believe it wise to let a red skunk run away with the chicken while I fight two pole-cats (a black and a brown one) who are trying to capture that same chicken.

I would truly like to know why Stalin's side of the story will not make just as good news : Hitler's and Mussolini's? A CHRISTIAN.

Hawaii's View Of The Sugar Issue

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In The Post of January 11 Senor Jose T. Baron, charge d'affaires a. i. of the Cuban Embassy, presents the case for the reciprocal trade agreements between the United States and Cuba from his point of view.

Without entering into the arguments for or against the concessions the United States has granted Cuba, in part, at least, inspired by our deep interest in the welfare of the nation our people helped establish, I must take exception to one paragraph in his letter.

Senor Baron says in part: "The subsidy given to sugar production in Puerto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippine Islands by the Smoot-Hawley tariff of 1930 was altogether at the expense of the Cuban producer."

This statement is erroneous in its implication that Hawaii is a foreign state, the products of which should in fairness be treated in the same manner as those of Cuba.

Hawaii is an incorporated territory, an integral part of the United States, and is classed among the domestic producers of sugar. The flag of the United States was raised over the Hawaiian Islands over 40 years ago, and since that date the entire economy of Hawaii has been included in that of the Nation to which it belongs.

Hawaii bears its proportionate share of the cost of maintaining the National Government, which of course Cuba does not do. The people of Hawaii have all the obligations and responsibilities of their United States citizenship, which of course is not true of the people of Cuba.

Hawaii buys practically all of its needs in the mainland market, which is not true of Cuba. Incidentally, Hawaii has bought, for the past several years, more of the products of the farms and factories of the United States than Cuba, a much larger community, has purchased.

To speak of our inclusion within the United States tariff wall as a "subsidy" is hardly correct. We share together with other parts of the country in the protection accorded our industries by the tariffs adopted at various times as the national policy of the United States.

It is also pertinent to note that Hawaii's proportionate share of the mainland market for sugar has remained practically constant for the past 30-odd years. It is not true, therefore, to say that we have increased our production "at the expense of the Cuban producer."

Senor Baron should know these facts, and his reference to Hawaii is a comment on the domestic policy of the United States, hardly proper from the representative of a foreign nation. May I suggest that whatever may be the arguments presented in favor of additional concessions to Cuba, its proponents do not try to make capital out of the policy of the United States toward its own constituent parts.

Philippine Mission

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In his letter to The Post of January 10, Mr. Gerona showed a lack of comprehension of the Philippine problem. He complained about the presence here of the Philippine Economic Mission, headed by Vice President Osmena, with not doing anything. He further bemoaned the fact that the mission is housed in what he called a luxurious hotel.

It may interest Mr. Gerona that Mr. Osmena and his party are here, not for a joy ride, as Mr. Gerona makes us believe, but to the contrary. They are engaged in the most arduous and serious task of securing an equitable economic arrangement from which to project a formidable and stable Filipino nation. To attain this objective from an unsympathetic Congress is not child's play, but requires long and careful deliberations and studies and oftentimes necessitates haggling and compromises.

As to indulging in luxury, Mr. Gerona is ignorant of the true facts. A room and a bath for each member and a two-room office for a mission of five persons is not a sign of extravagance, but rather that of frugality. He must also bear in mind that the mission represents that intangible something, the state—the Philippines.

Good Neighbor

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have just had an experience whose moral seems to me so clear that I shall not bother to point it out. It is this:

Returning to where I had parked my car I found the mud guard split, the tag loosened. "Just another of those things," I said to myself—and reached for my husband's checkbook.

Yesterday I was called on the phone. A woman's voice told me that it was she who had done it; that she had gone all the way from Virginia to the Traffic Bureau in order to learn the name of the owner and that she was prepared to pay for the repairs.

That sort of thing makes me a little less cynical about human nature. I have not asked her permission to use her name, so I withhold it. What do you call her: "Good citizen?" "Good neighbor?" "Good example?" I wonder whether she is a rare example? ANNE HARD.

Spanish Omelet

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Last Monday after attending a mass meeting held in a temple for the purpose of demanding a "Lifting of the Embargo on Spain" and continuing on in the evening to a meeting held in Constitution Hall for "Keeping the Embargo on Spain" one's head reeled. All this was followed by a nightmare of wearing a black shirt, a brown hat and sleeping under a red coverlet.

All that I could get out of the various arguments was that if Gen. "Adolfrancosolini" should succeed in conquering Spain no religion at all would be left in Spain and a new foothold would emerge for the dictators to implant their ideologies and for bombarding those countries who oppose their wills.

The question arising in my mind is—when the final issue of the war is settled—who would be the worst bombers, the loyalists or the dictators? ISABEL VICKERS.

The Post Impressionist

Joe Potts

THE PROFESSION of journalism attracts all varieties of talent, ability and good hard knowledge. Or, to put it more concisely: The newspaper game draws flies of all sizes. Not to mention current, and recent, stars in this firmament, we may note that Joseph Addison and Dick Steele shone here; and at the other end of this brilliant rainbow—to be exact, in the invisible infra-red end of the spectrum—is the present writer.

Way back in the early '80's there was a daily paper published in Washington; published, I fancy, on a shoestring. I am not going to give the name of that paper or of the publisher, but I worked for it—very gently; yet I never received a penny for my services; and, therefore, I think I am entitled to describe my own connection with it. My services were rendered for a more important consideration than mere money.

About that time, an uncertain minimal unit of the human race, one Wade Tench, was at loose ends in this city. He had been to college and, outside of a smattering of philosophy, a distortion of history and perversion of physical facts, he was a complete loss. He couldn't spell—he still can't; he could talk with apparent learning about the halfway high mathematics, but he couldn't run a level or a straight line, or survey a field to save his life; his knowledge of accountancy was of the zero magnitude; and what he didn't know and couldn't do was his best stock in trade.

Quite naturally, with this equipment no great corporations sought his services and even minor employment was reticent in calling him in. So, for companionship, he filled in his time by helping his newspaper friends cover assignments; but, even after he had learned a bit of this, there was nothing of the real reporter in him.

Nevertheless, as a hanger-on he was well acquainted with the city room of that paper and came to know Mr. Potts, the city editor. Now, Mr. Potts had a rough but frank manner and a sharp yet kindly tongue; and one Saturday night he turned in his swivel chair and glared at Wade until the latter thought Mr. Potts was going to throw him out. All he said was: "Look here, young one, I'm tired of having you cadge theater tickets off of real reporters. Suppose you earn them for yourself."

Well, that was where Wade Tench became a near-reporter. The assignment was to cover the various churches and give about a stickful of synopsis of the Sunday sermon of each. Wade had been in touch with theological students and knew enough of the procedure to fake a sermon on any subject. He furnished a little over a column of condensed sermons every Monday morning, in return for which the paper provided him with a police badge that passed him everywhere (this he wore under his vest on his suspenders and only showed when necessary), and an order for two theater tickets once a week.

That didn't put Wade in the class with Antonio de Neguerras, the son of the Portuguese Minister, and Charlie Macauley as a shining light of society. Not at all. But it did enable him to pay a few of his social debts, and his badge let him in to standing room everywhere.

But this isn't what I wanted to tell you; it is only introductory. One night we were sitting around Joe Potts waiting for something to do. Joe opened up—a procedure that, on an average, occurred once a month:

"Did I ever tell you how I escaped the hangman's noose? No? Well, this may be a lesson to you; for you can never tell when you may run into a similar jam.

"As a cub reporter, back in 1865, I knew most of the actors and was on friendly terms with a few of them. One morning, in April, I met John Wilkes Booth, about noon, and we proceeded to reduce the supply of alcoholic beverages in Washington. We wandered from one hotel bar to another, Wilkes filling me up with anecdotes, witticisms—and whisky, until, about 3 or 4 p. m., I recognized that, if I were to do any work that night, I had better go home and get some sleep. This I did.

"Well, sir, when I wandered down toward the office, a little late, and still, a little befuddled, I met a fellow reporter about two blocks short of my destination.

"'The President has been shot,' he said breathlessly.

"'By whom?' I asked.

"'By Wilkes Booth, who has escaped,' he replied.

"And, boy, that's where I became cold sober and wide awake. 'How much money have you on you?' I asked. 'I was with Wilkes all the morning, but I knew nothing of this and this town is the one place I don't want to be.'

"With that he opened up his heart and his purse, as did a few other friends; and I went home, gathered a few clothes and hurried to the old B. & O. Station. I traveled all that night and a bit of the next day and finally wound up in the backwoods of Pennsylvania among the other native Pottses. And there I laid low until all the rumpus over the assassination of the President had blown over.

"That escapade, shall we say, marked high water with me as showing intelligence. For the mob spirit was out to wreak vengeance on any and everyone who could by any means be linked with Wilkes Booth, and innocence could not save you.

"If I had remained in Washington I should have hanged like the rest of them. For I had been with Wilkes the most of the day. But I observed the greater part of valor, which is discretion.

"What in hell are you kids sitting around here for? Get out and dig up some news."

Fair Enough

Deep Thinking

I HAVE GIVEN DEEP study to many books, papers and speeches by leading economists of the New Deal on the gradual reflation of quantitative reserves to combine deficit financing and collective bargaining with the liquidation of human rights. The corollary seems to be the social conscription of agriculture.

Mr. Eccles, Mr. Thurman Arnold, Mr. Leon Henderson and, at times, Father Coughlin and Dr. Townsend have seemed to me to be in agreement on this radical proposal.

If I interpret them aright—and I sometimes doubt that I fully understand them, in some particulars—this position marks a dangerous departure from the traditional capitalistic concept of social and industrial transition. Property rights inevitably abdicate to political commitments of imponderable force which everywhere conflict with tax relief and liberty of conscience.

MR. ECCLES, be it said, appears to favor the middle way, while Mr. Arnold's position seems to me to place him a little to the left of totalitarian wage-levelism in the subnormal areas of intellectual orientation. That is my understanding.

So much for that, and I may say that I find myself in partial agreement up to the point where this theory defies the fundamental standpoint of economic tyranny in the intermittent cycles of politico-corporate finance. I have to dissent there, holding that the experience of the last half-century provides ample proof and warning that a simplified control of constitutional alignments is no guarantee of nonproductive bimetallism. There is no proved formula in all economic knowledge for the absolute implementation of compulsory expansion and social competition.

The contrary, I insist, is just cockeyed. It simply doesn't make sense, and no cockeyed janissary can make it make sense.

SCHULTZ OF VIENNA wrote, more than 200 years ago: "By creating wealth, the state revives the indispensable factor of fiduciary expediency which is co-existive with the judicial acceptance of private enterprise at an annual living wage."

That is as true today as it was then.

Every attempt to violate this elementary absolute of simple economics has proved a profound deterioration in the Federal Reserve, where there is always a wise tendency to discount industrial feudalism if accompanied by democratic guarantees and a fair volume of electoral resources. None but a visionary theorist will argue against the demonstrated realities of a field of abstract solecism conditioned by the fiduciary habits of human dignity.

ATHEISM, therefore, need be vitiated only by the simple pressure of international usury, as shown by the bloody ignominies of countless economic adventurers from Robespierre in the Middle Ages to Giuseppe Avanti, whose economic heresies wrecked the Milanese nobility in the famine of 1790. Whenever any considerable number of the people are caught between greedy dualism and the remorseless limitations of supply and demand you must have social and ecouomic chauvinism, with all the terrors that that dread phrase implies. The master-and-slave equation in commodity consumption cannot be revoked by esoteric appeal to corporate enhancement or resort to artificial repudiation. One need only refer to the disastrous exploit of Bjornstrom, the economic edema who plunged Sweden into a maelstrom of amorphous bater in the futile repercussions of the 27 years war, for a complete answer to that which I understand to be Father Coughlin's remedy for existing inequalities.

As to Mr. Henderson's contention, if I comprehend his warning, it need only be remarked that the underlying view is not essential to an accurate conviction in advance of imperative reforms. To attempt any complete hypothesis of currency values in this apparent paradox, to gamble commodities against the furtive and, I think, fallacious parallel of sound money, is a vicious acceptance of international manipulation and the forerunner of a proletarian oligarchy.

The fatal delusion of raucous altruism controls the vexed problem of religious principle, while so-called experts argue and future events mock the struggle for an equitable flow of purchasing debentures.

That way lies chaos.

Morale In Loyalist Spain

By Lawrence A. Fernsworth

Special Correspondence of The Post

Food Shortage Accepted Stoically

WHILE THE FOOD question remains serious in Republican Spain I find no evidence that it is undermining the morale of the civilian population. The report that the United States is sending considerable foodstuffs has had a cheering effect. The new Franco push is taken with the same stoicism that has marked other military operations. Everybody realizes that Franco is still far from Barcelona and there is a general optimistic impression that he will never get there.

The recent reported dissensions on the Franco side which came to a head in a plot discovered through papers seized in the British consular pouch at Irun, is confirmatory of the loyalist government's own previous reports. The view is taken in Barcelona that the war is still a political rather than a military problem. The military plan is one of frustrating the enemy rather than of gaining spectacular victories, for it is felt that if Franco can be fought to a standstill long enough it will mean his ultimate defeat. He would be unable to compose the dissatisfaction in his own ranks, it is argued, and there is resentment against him on several grounds.

One is his failure to end the war with victory as repeatedly promised. Another is the presence of the foreign troops. Moreover a great mass of Franco's "followers" have an accentuated revolutionary spirit not far removed from that of the hated so-called "Reds" of the other side. They are lukewarm in their acceptance of monarchism and the Church, in which they have rather perfunctorily acquiesced as part of the war formula.

The loyalist government, I am told by one of its ministers, has friends working on the other side trying to convince "well-meaning" Spaniards, particularly of the type just described, that there is little difference between their aspirations and those of republican Spain, as embodied in Prime Minister Negrin's 13 points.

SOME OF THE PRINCIPAL points of the 13, it may be recalled, are the absolute independence and integrity of Spain; a popular republic and a vigorous state; full guarantees for civil and religious rights; a plebiscite when the war shall have ended; protection for property and the producing elements and in a very special way for the small property holder; profound agrarian reform and advanced social legislation; finally, an "ample amnesty for all Spaniards who desire to co-operate in the work of reconstruction, together with renunciation of vengeance and reprisal."

While the loyalists are hopeful in this respect, they have no illusions that the final reconciliation, if it comes, will be easy. The reactionary or at best the ultra-conservative wing of the Franco support may be expected to resist to the last. Like Franco himself they realize that they will have lost the high stakes for which they are playing unless they have a complete military victory. Spain is a land of surprises. No one can tell what will come out of the peace gestures. The fact that republican Spaniards, who know their own people, build hopes upon them is not without its significance.

There is no doubt that on both side. Spanish pride has been deeply wounded by the foreign invasion. This is even true of many of the Franco supporters who feel that, having gone as far as they have, they must go through with it. This pride is something to be reckoned with in Spanish psychology, and is a real factor in explaining the tenacious resistance on the republican side. At Barcelona it is also felt that it may be a factor in uniting all "well-meaning" Spaniards. The republican government is trying to make the war "a question of honor" for all Spaniards, and, as President Azana remarked in his most recent public speech, "in no nation in the world does one so roundly repeat 'a question of honor' as in Spain."

IN THE INTERNATIONAL terrain it is still felt that anything might happen on the morrow. The opposition in England and France to the four-power policy grows. The British government has seen fit not to accord a recognition of belligerency which on the morrow of the Munich agreement was confidently expected by France. The international situation is clearly capable of such changes as may render it more favorable to the Loyalist side. The food situation is already alleviated by America's generosity. Hope is still felt that the American arms embargo may be lifted in that quarter and perhaps others. The growing rift between the United States and Germany, one of Franco's principal allies, may be one of the factors to bring this about.

The practical question to be faced by the loyalists is: How long can they go on resisting?

Of first consideration is the army and its morale. No one, who like this writer has mingled with it in the war zone, can doubt of that morale and discipline. Going up to Barcelona from the front is like entering a new hemisphere of life, not only because one escapes the behind-the lines drabness and tenseness, but because of the high enthusiasm one finds for the job in hand. Enthusiasm is necessarily more subdued and "spotty" in civilian zones where walk privation, misery and suffering. But at the front one finds remarkable cohesion between the various units. They have a common job to do and they do it, speaking with scorn of those civilians back in the "rear guard" who sometimes worry themselves and the government with petty rivalries and disputes.

THE ARMY has been completely rebuilt since those disastrous days of last March and April when it was virtually on the run. The mistakes made then have been taken into account and one surmises they will not be repeated.

Another important problem is war materiel. War industries on a vast scale have been organized in Barcelona and other cities and towns. In loyalist territory separated from Barcelona by Franco's wedge to the Mediterranean, and centering at Valencia, there is considerable iron and lead, while mercury is produced in abundance at the celebrated mines of Almaden, in Andalucia. Catalonia has one of the world's richest potash mines. It is still possible to import considerable other materials needed in war manufacture, such as cotton. At the beginning of the war the government had on hand some 125,000 bales, of which some 60,000 were from America, the rest from India and Egypt. American imports have stopped but it has been possible to import moderate quantities from India and Russia. Unfortunately for the government, Franco's sea raiders some months ago managed to lay hands on some 20,000 bales of this.

Bad as the food problem is, it is not likely to get worse, but rather to improve. The population is largely undernourished, but can still hold out for a long time. The recent American donations have helped and at the same time have cheered up the population.

The government has a firm control of law and order. Crimes of violence are astonishingly rare—infinitely fewer than Barcelona has known in a turbulent history of crime that wound its way through monarchical, dictatorship and republican days before the war. Such warring factions as Anarcho-Syndicalists and Socialists have buried the hatchet and their labor unions are working together. The government of Dr. Juan Negrin is in a strong position. This was demonstrated at the last meeting of the Cortes when, notwithstanding lively critical darts leveled at him by some members of the Popular Front, such as the Catalans and the Basques, they voted him unconditional confidence.

In Spanish politics there are always dissensions—or it would not be Spanish politics. And so there is what for practical purposes might be described as an opposition wing to Dr. Negrin's Popular Front government. What is important, however, is that the opposition realizes the necessity of going along with Negrin and giving him their support. When in the Cortes he accorded them the opportunity of deposing him, they rejected it. Even the ex-Premier, Largo Caballero, perhaps the bitterest enemy of the present governmental setup, is silent. "Now is no time to change the government," said one of his closest lieutenants to me recently. All of which argues that the Negrin government is in a strong position to carry on with its task of resisting.

TO RECAPITULATE: The Popular Front government shows no signs of cracking. And although from the standpoint of raw materials and crude foodstuffs, together with facilities for obtaining supplies from the outside, Franco is seen to have an advantage, this advantage is hardly sufficient to break down loyalist resistance.

Mr. Hopkins' Rise To Fame

By Mark Sullivan

'Pinafore' Quoted

EVENTS of the day ought not to be permitted to go by without observing their resemblance to events of the past, as described in history or literature. Contemplation of one of the most conspicuous episodes of the present week in national politics led me to turn to some verse in which one can sometimes find diversion.

Among the most entertaining bits of English rhyme is a ballad which tells the story of an ambitious and worthy youth. Starting lowly, and in an occupation far removed from maritime, he was nevertheless able, by diligence, to work his way up and up, until he entered politics, became a knight, and at the peak of his career was able to sing:

I am the monarch of the sea,
The ruler of the Queen's Navee.

THE OFFICE which this hero attained by a lifetime of devotion to another line of work was, I suppose, First Lord of the Admiralty. Whatever his title, he was "tops," and he told how he arrived there. I quote from the comic opera, "Pinafore." Anyone who wishes to read the rest of this engaging story of success achieved by diligence can find it in the plays of Gilbert and Sullivan, in the Modern Library:

When I was a lad I served a term
As office boy in an attorney's firm.
I cleaned the windows and I swept the floor,
And I polished up the handle of the big front door,
I polished up that handle so carefullee
That now I am ruler of the Queen's Navee . . .

AS OFFICE BOY he was so good that he advanced to junior law clerk, to articled clerk, to serving writs, and finally:

Of legal knowledge I acquired such a grip
That they took me into partnership.
And that junior partnership, I ween,
Was the one ship that I ever had seen.

But that kind of ship so suited me,
That now I am ruler of the Queen's Navee . . .

Now Landsmen all, whoever you may be,
If you want to rise to the top of the tree . . .
Stick close to your desks and never go to sea
And you all may be Rulers of the Queen's Navee.

What this ballad teaches, the reader will observe, is that experience in one line may lead to elevation in a wholly different line. Granted intrinsic merit—and granted also perhaps a gift for politics, together with the favor of the great—there is no reason why a man's honors should be restricted to the particular kind of career he has led. To those who really have greatness in them, experience in one area of life can with complete appropriateness lead to honors in a wholly different area.

THE PROOF of this we have seen this week. We have seen a man made Secretary of Commerce—made, so to speak, First Lord of Commerce, the governmental symbol of rule over industry, business, trade, and all that pertains thereto—monarch over mill and mine. When we turn to examine the career which led to this distinction, we find it in Who's Who.

Who's Who, being an autere book, given to formal and condensed phraseology, does not tell this American success story as charmingly as Gilbert and Sullivan told the English one. But the successive stages of advancement are set out with detailed thoroughness:

HOPKINS, HARRY L. Began as supervisor Assn. for Improving Condition of Poor; exec. sec. Bd. Child Welfare, 1918-22; div. mgr. New Orleans for Am. Red Cross, 1922-24; then asst. dir. Assn. for Improving Condition of the Poor; then, dir. New York Tuberculosis and Health Assn.; apptd. exec. dir. N. Y. State Temporary Emergency Relief Administration, 1931, chmn., 1932; apptd. Federal administrator emergency relief, 1933. Works Progress Administrator, 1935—

Nothing about commerce in that. But to suggest that a Secretary of Commerce ought to have some experience in commerce would be as unreasonable as to say that the ruler of the Queen's Navee ought to have had some experience with ships.

I wonder if any American satirist will find material for a comic opera in Mr. Harry Hopkins.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Armament Program

NOW THAT the President's special armament program has been submitted to Congress, the question is how the citizen is to judge how much is too much, how much is too little, how much is enough.

The program calls for additional appropriations of $552,000,000. But of this sum only $210,000,000 are to be paid out of the Treasury in the next 18 months and the balance is to be paid out after July 1, 1940. Thus it is obvious that, although the extra armaments are to be begun immediately, the President does not expect to have them completed sooner than 18 to perhaps 30 months hence. And so, though the program calls for important new naval bases and a considerably enlarged air force, it is evident on the face of it that they are not designed for, nor could they be made available for, any immediate emergency.

THIS MEANS that though the President proposes substantially to strengthen the American defenses, he cannot be contemplating American intervention in any such war as Messrs. Kennedy and Bullitt are reported as having predicted for the spring. If the President were thinking of that, this program would be preposterously inadequate and leisurely. For this program in no way resembles the Japanese or the German armament program. It differs from them in that this is in fact a peacetime program: it is not even the beginning of an attempt to place the Nation on a war footing. The totalitarian programs, on the other hand, place the whole industry and the whole population at the disposal of the war machine.

The President's message is, therefore, specific and indisputable proof that while he is strengthening the American defenses, he is not preparing for war. Senator Nye may not believe this. But no European military man who studies this program will have any doubt about it. So leisurely and, comparatively, so modest an increase of armaments over a period of more than 18 months is proof conclusive that no armed intervention in Europe is now contemplated.

IT MAY THEN be asked why, when everyone is talking about how near is the danger of a world war, the President should ask for armaments that will not begin to count until such a distant future. The reason presumably is as follows: The United States cannot be in serious danger unless it is attacked simultaneously in both oceans by the Tokyo-Berlin-Rome combination. Such an attack is, of course, out of the question at the present time. It would become possible only if in Asia the Chinese made peace with the Japanese and became their vassals and allies, and if in Europe the Anglo-French power collapsed under a sudden and decisive knockout blow.

On this, the most pessimistic, calculation no critical danger could, however, develop for the United States in less than a year. We can be certain of at least that much margin of time. On the other hand, it is not necessary to take the most pessimistic view. It is still possible today, though the next few months may radically alter the situation, to hold that the Anglo-French power of resistance will be sufficient to prevent even the attempt at a knockout blow. If it is, then our basic security will remain unimpaired. And it is on this more optimistic view of the world situation that the President must feel justified in proposing a "minimum" program.

The next few months will determine whether the optimistic view is correct—whether Munich was a defeat that is to be turned into a rout, or whether Munich was the last stage of a retreat that that has now come to an end. And that will determine whether this program is enough or not enough.

IF THE BRITISH and French are able to hold their positions in western Europe, our armaments will be sufficient. For we are strong enough to hold the Japanese in bounds. If the British and French give way—either in war or in a second and vaster Munich, then our armaments will be quite insufficient and we shall have to undertake not what the President calls "a minimum," but something much greater than that.

The question then is why, if the real issue is still to be decided, we should now undertake this minimum program. Why not wait and see?

There is a practical reason why these additional armaments should be prepared now. Precisely because it takes so long to construct naval bases and to create the capacity to produce airplanes and to train pilots and officers and technicians, it is elementary prudence to begin now. If by any fortunate and improbable chance the world settles down to live peaceably, we shall hardly begrudge the money we shall have spent unnecessarily. If, on the other hand, the world goes deeper and deeper into disorder and violence, we shall never forgive ourselves if we failed to prepare for a critical emergency.

Those who do not wish to adopt this program will, therefore, take a heavy responsibility. They will in effect be saying that they can guarantee that two years hence the United States may not find itself threatened with war. But how in a world such as this can they possibly be sure of that?

Arms For Defense

By Barnet Nover

Military Needs And Diplomatic Realities

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S defense message is disarming in its apparent moderation. The Chief Executive did not, as was anticipated in alarmist circles, make the sky the limit. He asked only for a relatively modest increase in our defense forces, including the vital air arm. With respect to the latter, the appropriations he asks Congress to make will provide for the addition not of 10,000 planes, as some feared, but a good deal less than half of that total.

It is not at all unlikely, therefore, that the President's recommendations will have fairly easy sledding in Congress. The overwhelming majority of Amesicans are agreed that in a world which is arming to the teeth, rearmament is an unpleasant necessity for us, too. And most of them will probably feel that the special appropriation of $525,000,000 which the President's program calls for is not excessive, particularly since only about $210,000,000 of this sum would actually be spent before June 30, 1940.

IN THE KINGDOM of the blind, a one-eyed man is king. If, as is apparent, we are not going to compete in rearmament with the great military powers of Europe, the fact must not be lost sight of that we are nonetheless going to spend more for war preparation purposes than ever before in peace-time history.

In his budget message, President Roosevelt called for regular defense appropriations estimated at $1,319,000,000. This means, assuming that the whole sum will be spent during the fiscal year 1939-1940 and that no more than an estimated $210,000,000 of the special defense appropriations will be spent during the same period, that the total defense expeditures during the coming year will total well over a billion and a half dollars.

This is a sizeable sum, judged even by our present inflated standards. It is about five times as much as we spent for the Army and Navy in 1914, and almost three times as much as was spent by this Nation for defense purposes in 1931, at the beginning of the present cycle of international anarchy. And it would be optimistic, indeed, to assume that the peak of defense expenditures has been reached. The chances are much greater that the present rearmament budget will seem modest by comparison with what may be in store for us, even as the 1931 military and naval budget seems very modest indeed in comparison with the one contemplated today.

IN OTHER WORDS, despite our vaunted isolation, we, like other nations, find it necessary to foot the bill for the breakdown of the world's peace machinery and Europe's balance of power. We shall continue to pay this bill as long as the world remains unsafe for inadequately armed nations.

It is probably true, as some argue, that this Nation is in no immediate danger of attack either from the east or the west, and, of course, we have nothing to fear from our neighbors to the north and south. But how long we shall continue to enjoy that blessed immunity is problematical.

The present is clearly no time for complacence or for wishful thinking. We cannot assume that the fate of other nations, such as China or Spain, will never be our fate or that when the aggressors pounce upon us or upon our neighbors whom we are determined to defend, we shall automatically be able to resist the onslaught.

BUT IF PRUDENCE dictates that we must not be behindhand in our military and naval preparations it is equally the counsel of wisdom that the United States do nothing to give aid and comfort to the forces of chaos that are abroad in the world.

Our record in this particular is not a happy one. Our policy with respect to world affairs has been one of indifference tempered only by expostulation. We have eloquently preached the gospel of the good life to all and sundry, but the disorderly elements have taken much greater stock in such actions as the passage of the Neutrality act with its implication that we consider our safety to lie in treating aggressor and victim with bland impartiality. We have shown a wholly legitimate alarm over the possible spread to this Hemisphere of the totalitarian philosophies that are making a shambles of the continent overseas. But we have done nothing to prevent Spain from becoming a springboard for Fascist penetration of the New World. Indeed our embargo policy has made us the unwitting allies of the aggressor.

We have expostulated with Japan on repeated occasions concerning the island empire's infringement of our rights in China. But not until the undeclared war was about a year old did we even apply moral suasion in an attempt to cut off the flow of airplanes and aerial bombs to that nation.

If, therefore, we now find it necessary to increase our burden of armaments, that is in no small measure because alone or in conjunction with like-minded nations we have failed to throw our full weight in the diplomatic scales.

It is a clearly understood principle of flood prevention that a dike provides only temporary safety; that the best way to deal with the problem is to take precautionary measures at the headwaters. If, in our defense program, we are now forced to build up a rearmament dike to unprecedented heights it is only because we have assumed that somehow the flood waters which have overwhelmed other nations would not touch ours. We know better now. We are now in the midst of a rude and expensive awakening.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Football Stadium Inaugural

W. Lee O'Daniel, radio specialist who got elected Governor of Texas, will hold his inauguration in a football stadium instead of in the State capitol. Mr. O'Daniel is a showman and wanted no small-time inaugural. He expects 75,000 spectators when he is sworn in on a football field.

The new Governor considers that in winning the election he made one of the most stirring touchdowns of the year.

There will be brass bands, male and female choruses and cheer leaders, and Mr. O'Daniel will presumably come onto the field in a white sweater bearing a huge letter T.

Governors everywhere will be watching O'Daniel's performance on the field of Texas University. If it goes over big, inaugural ceremonies in football bowls may become the mode.

In time we may see the sports experts teaming with the political correspondents in naming a team of all-American Governors.

One can imagine the running account of Gov. O'Daniel's inaugural:

Under clear skies and with ideal weather prevailing for football and politics, 75,000 fans packed the stadium today for the inauguration of Gov. W. Lee (Touchdown) O'Daniel. The Governor trotted onto the field at 1:55 and the great crowd rose and cheered as one man. He went through a snappy drill in punting, blocking, running and recovering fumbles.

O'Daniel seemed fast and in the pink and got another ovation when he wound up his practice by taking the oath of office while doing a series of back handsprings across the gridiron.

Winning the toss, he chose the north microphone with the wind at his back. The ceremonies had hardly begun before he electrified the stands by a sensational 35-yard gain. He straight-armed the tax issue, bowled over the pension question by sheer force of impact and was brought down only when he was forced out of bounds.

On the very next play he broke through the social security issue, eluded the budget problem and picked up 10 yards before he was tackled from behind by the reclamation issue.

The stands were now in an uproar, but a groan swept the stadium when he was penalized 20 yards for the use of the hidden microphone play. Trying to smash through center, he was held without gain. "It served me right for trying the center. I got where I am today through end runs."

The crowds yelled "Touchdown! Touchdown!" but O'Daniel was unable to score, due to the fact that the opposition had removed the goal posts.

Realizing that there was no percentage in trying to please the spectators any longer along that line, the Governor threw off his football togs, climbed into his broadcasting clothes and went into his hillbilly act.

After a long argument the official scorers gave the inaugural score as O'Daniel 60, Orthodox 0.

Another Appeasement Problem

Berlin has run out of coffee, and all Germany is practically without a supply. Maybe the time will come over there when Germans can't get anything in which to dunk their crullers.

"G-Men Get Woman and Dope."—Headline. Proving, thinks Jerry Cooper, that you can avoid these triangle cases.

Now that a machine that can talk has been invented a lot of us are pretty nervous. There seemed to be enough of it without quantity production.

Can You Remember—

Away back when no sidewalks were built in front of a country house unless they were needed?

Add similes: as unconvincing as an audit.

"The Citadel" has been voted the best movie of the year by movie critics. It was the one film that obviously didn't need any doctoring.

Old-Time Advertising

Hi: I see there is another fight on against billboards, and it brings back to memory the days before billboards when sign painters plastered rural America with advertisements. Back in the horse and buggy days it was the stunt to daub pill advertisements on rocks along the roadside. Barns came in for a big play and there wasn't a barn, hen house or carriage shed back home that didn't have a pill sign on it, or maybe an indigestion tablet, a breakfast food or a boneless cod ad. Kidney pill advertisements were away out ahead in barn-roof advertising, however, and you can still see 'em in the more rural areas.

Whimsy Reigns On Screen in Earle Feature

'Say It in French,' Plus Crosby Orchestra, Scores Comedy Hit

"SAY IT IN FRENCH." Paramount picturization of a play by Jacques Deval, adapted to the screen by Frederick Jackson, featuring Ray Milland, Olympe Bradna, Mary Carlisle and Irene Harvey, with Janet Beecher, Holmes Herbert, Walter Kingsford, William Collier, sr., Erik Rhodes, Mona Barrie, G. P. Huntley, Gertrude Sutton, Forbes Murray, Billy Daniels and Billy Lee. Directed by Andrew L. Stone. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At the Earle Theater.

Clipping along at a cocky 1939 speed, "Say it in French" is a not particularly original story that turns out to be a pleasantly enjoyable film, principally because of demented sidelines the camera slyly brings into focus every other minute. On the Earle stage, Bob Crosby's orchestra and entertainers make for something of a gala swing-fest

It is an airy piece of nothing on which Jacques Deval, the author of "Tovarich," has built his play. Scenarist Frederick Jackson deserves some sort of star billing for having spun it so lightly onto a screen script. Richard Carrington, star amateur golfer, returns from France to Park avenue with a young Parisienne student as his bride. Before his parents bother to listen to his news, they rattle off theirs; in order to save the family fortune Richard must wed the wealthy debutante whose grouchy godfather will then sign the all-important contract. Mistaken for the new French maid, the bride slips into the household and manages to straighten out the irksome situation.

Some Intriguing Didoes

These didoes become distinctly palatable when Butler Walter Kingsford straightens a mirror his way and Mistress Janet Beecher trips down the hall a few seconds later and straightens it her way; a silent little urchin with a lollypop, Billy Lee, solemnly follows a talkative Ray Milland and Irene Hervey around Central Park; eternally unwanted Erick Rhodes jumps over two baby carriages and a duo of surprised tots pop up to investigate; debutante Hervey grabs a laden waiter in the Rainbow Room and calmly guzzles a half dozen rum cocktails and holds her own until capsized by a rug; suave Ray Milland, with the completely "out" Miss Hervey slung carelessly over his shoulder, pleasantly greeting dignified friends in the swank Rockefeller corridors and sluicing the trim Hervey ankles into tempting highballs; saucy Olympe Bradna pushing the son of the household out of the maid's room at the dawn's early light, and, finally, the delectable Hervey and lanky Milland being madly propelled from Park avenue to the Queen Mary pier in a two-by-four wagon and nothing flat by messenger Billy Daniels.

Mr. Milland is as bewildered as any of us would be, and Olympe (pronounced Olympe—say it in French) Bradna is a saucy little baggage whose lapse into French intrigued yesterday's first house to a surprising and promising degree. Miss Beecher is subdued and funny in a Billie Burke type of part and Walter Kingsford is an excellent butler. Beautiful Irene Hervey makes the most of a large role.

The "Bob Cats" Swing It

For swingsters, jitterbugs and the like, the news that Bob Crosby and his "Bob Cats" are on the Earle stage is considered by some a summons to the Thirteenth street house. "The Girl Friend of the Whirling Dervish," "Jeepers Creepers" and "Small Fry" are some of the Crosby numbers, and with him is a slightly nonchalant lady with a lazy sort of air, Marion Mann, whose rhythmic versions of "Martha" and "Two Sleepy People" stopped the faithful in their tracks yesterday afternoon. From Cole Porter's latest musical comedy she also warbles, "Get Out of Town." Troy and Lynn silently slip into an eccentric dance group, majoring in "The Birth of the Blues" and a collegiate "College Swing."

From the Crosby aggregation Paul Whiteman recently selected four members of his mythical all-American band—Bob Zurke, Eddie Miller, Bob Haggart and Ray Bandur. This foursome loosens up with a specialty group to demonstrate the Whiteman genius for pickin' 'em.

Bob Williams and his amazing "Red Dust" are also on the bill and "Red" is as astounding as ever. "Red" is that dog which goes limp or stiffens up as the whim seems to get him. Williams has added some patter to the act since it was last seen here.

Old-timers pop up in the short subjects, with Leon Errol as a race-track fiend and Vivian Tobin as his wife. "Unusual Professions" and news flashes complete the new bill at the Earle, a bill made to order for admirers of the fresh touch in their celluloid madness, and for animals lovers of either Mr. Crosby's "Cats" or Mr. Williams' dog.

Trains for K.O.; Only Hisses Hero

Hollywood is unpredictable.

Under instructions from his studio, Robert Allen trained under professional boxers at the Terry Hunt gymnasium for six weeks for a scene in "The Three Musketeers," in which he was to knock out Don Ameche. He worked out with Patty Sullivan and mixed blows with Robert Taylor, Bill Gargan and others. He sweated hard for two hours every day.

The big day for filming the sequence finally arrived. Allan Dwan, directing the picture for Twentieth Century-Fox, took a huddle with his assistants.

The result: Robert Allen was merely to scowl at Ameche. A knockout blow, the director said, would upset the mood of the film.

'Artists and Models Abroad' Makes Whoopee on Capitol Screen

Jack Benny Stars, With Joan Bennett, In Frivolous Musical; Comets Star Again

"ARTISTS AND MODELS ABROAD." Paramount picturization of an original story by Howard Lindsay and Russell Crouse, adapted to the screen by the authors and Ken Englund, starring Jack Benny and Joan Bennett and featuring Mary Boland, Charley Grapewin, Fritz Feld, Joyce Compton, the Yacht Club Boys, G. P. Huntley, Joyce Mathews, Charles de Ravenne, Punkins Parker, Sheila Darcy, Yvonne Duval, Gwen Kenyon, Marie DeForrest and Jules Raucourt. Songs by Rainger and Robin. Directed by Mitchell Leisen. Previewed Tuesday afternoon, January 10. At the Capitol Theater.

There is so much of a number of things woven into the fabric of "Artists and Models Abroad," disclosed to the public yesterday for the first time on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater, that its definite classification becomes a trifle difficult.

BELL

There is, for example, that rousing song of the Yacht Club Boys'—Adler Kelley, Mann and Kern—near the beginning of the action that almost sets the pace for the picture. It is a trivial, but superlatively lyricized "running number" that traverses practically all of the streets in Paris to the refrain of "You're Broke, You Dope," or the other way around, as the case may be. Then there is that hit tune by Rainger and Robin, "What Have You Got That Gets Me?" that comes even nearer being the theme song of the piece. Among the assets of this elaborate Paramount production, I should say that the plot devised by Howard Lindsay, Russell Crouse and Ken Englund, runs back in the ruck. That is largely because it is so kicked around and indefatigably interrupted that it only has occasion to assert itself vehemently at infrequent and widely separated intervals.

The whole melange has to do with a troupe of stranded American "hoofers" trying to crash the Paris Exposition. They encounter an apparently destitute young woman who happens to be the penniless daughter of an oil man who almost sells out his holdings for a meager $16,000,000 when he might just as well have had 18 or 20 millions. He was saved from that by Jack "Buck Boswell" Benny, in a moment of inspired aberration.

More "Mistaken" Identities

The misapprehension as to the real identity of Patricia Harper and her daddy, wallowing in "black gold," and the conviction of the impecunious Mr. Boswell that they are merely a couple of "tramps" to whom he is doing a colossal favor by permitting them to share his bankruptcy, leads eventually into the apparent theft of one of the most priceless of the Napoleonic jewels and all maner of "cops and robbers" developments.

It is here that the story bogs down more than anywhere else. There is the basis of a sound "straight" comedy in the material that has been utilized in "Artists and Models Abroad," but it has been so vitiated by extraneous and unimportant byplay that more often than not—until the final sequences of the picture—it is obscured almost to the point of nonexistence.

One of the most Gargantuan impediments of the orderly progress of the play's basic narrative constitutes the feature of the film that in all probability will be most vividly remembered by the casual customer. That is the beauty "production line" sequence, in which a vast number of beautiful young women "start from scratch" and wind up at the end as the most glamorously lovely creatures you ever have clapped an eye on. This is after they have passed through the ablutionary grandeurs of Director Mitchell Leisen's oceanic baths, the hands of an amazing number of expert beauticians and the most deft of the modistes and couturiers. While all this, to be sure, has something to do with the eventual working out of the plot, it quite evidently has been introduced for its own sake and serves primarily as an eye-filling interval of feminine display, rather than anything of prime dramaturgic value.

Cast Better Than Material

Whatever shortcomings the film may have are to be laid to the diffusion of its content rather than to any deficiency on the part of the cast. Little needs to be said about the skill with which Jack Benny, the Yacht Club Boys, Mary Boland, Charles Grapewin, Joan Bennett, Joyce Compton, Adrienne D'Abrincourt, Georges Renavent and the numerous others in the present ensemble always are able to discharge the tasks allotted them.

Director Leisen has kept his gay charade rolling at fast pace and some of the photography is unusually effective. And in the cast, of course, are an impressive number of young "artists and models" who will be heard from increasingly, one suspects, as time goes on.

On the stage at the Capitol this week there is a bill in which, it seems to me, the Chester Hale Capitol Comets are the outstanding feature. This is not to belittle the earnest endeavors of Benny Ross and Maxine Stone, two amiable serio-comics; the fine vocalism of Josephine Huston, one of the better sopranos, or the accomplished adagio work of those talented and gymnastic youngsters, Maurice and Betty Whalen, but merely to say that the Comets' "garland number," which they repeat this week, is one of the most extrancing things they do.

Phil Lampkin's own arrangement of Victor Herbert's "Sweethearts" music comprises the excellent overture, and the Fox Movietone News rounds out a bill that strikes a quick, if not profound, audience response.

Ride 'Im Cowgirl and Cowboy!

"PUNKINS" PARKER AND JACK BENNY astride a vicious bronco that doesn't appear in the picture, but still gives some notion of the frivolous quality of "Artists and Models Abroad," this week's major screen attraction at Loew's Capitol Theater. Mr. Benny, of course, is star of the film and Miss Parker merely a rising young starlet who shares minor honors with a considerable group of other young aspirants to film fame

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Jan. 13.—Too bad "The Great Man Votes" came at the beginning of the year instead of the end because we'd now be voting Jack Barrymore the Academy Award. And in 12 months we're so apt to forget. Jack does a magnificent job and so does that new director, Garson Kanin. He's one of the best bits of luck this town's had in the past year. The honesty, sincerity, and simplicity of his direction are things to marvel at.

HEDDA HOPPER

Little Virginia Weidler proves that she can troupe right there with the best, and so does little Peter Holden. And as for that Donald MacBride—why don't we see more of him? For once, Katherine Alexander got a good part. But I resent the habit of giving that sweet person and fine actress, Elizabeth Risdon, nasty women. Some of our nastiest play our sweet parts, and vice versa. There should be a law against it.

And while we're on awards, why not give one to the man or woman who kept the same husband and wife or beau for a year? And find some fitting booby prize for the man and woman who had a different beau every night? I know, I know—it's jealousy on my part. But at least I'm the first to admit it.

With the spy-glasses of the world on Hollywood, we did what we could to keep down the chatter about lavish exchange of costly Christmas presents, the fabulous fur coats, diamond necklaces and star sapphires fit for a Maharajah's headgear. But the very ones who were so anxious to have that glossed over, are the ones who are spending most.

So it wasn't to be wondered at that Louis B. Mayer was photographed receiving his award at the Santa Anita track that you heard—not cheers, but boos. No, there's no reason in the world why he shouldn't have a racing stable. Other rich men have been doing it for years but we're in a spotlight business and attendance has been falling off at the box office. And that goes for those three-day poker games at Palm Springs where $30,000 changed hands, too.

Hal Roach is having such fun directing "Captain Fury" and going into all the details. But he did run into a little bustle trouble. He wanted the girls to wear those baby balloons 50 years before they'd ever been invented by the man who harbored a grudge against all women!

Jean Parker has the darndest luck. Just as she got the lead in "Romance of the Redwoods" her temperature went to 101—wisdom tooth trouble. Why, Jean, I didn't know you were old enough to cut 'em!

Phyllis Brooks is partying with a nurse in attendance, principally to see that she doesn't smoke. She won't be allowed a cigarette for six months. She's had a lucky return from tubular pneumonia.

Claudette Colbert's French poodle, "Smokey" didn't like the pigeons on the set, so they were replaced by Chinese chickens with tails ten feet long. Guess Smokey doesn't like fowl, 'cause he bit their tails off and it cost the studio $50.

The mother of a famous character woman is a sweet little old lady who never reads anything but the headlines of the woman's page. She took her two grandchildren to the beach the other day and they were thrilled to death when they saw Johnny Weismuller giving himself a workout. They raved but she never said a word, until they were on their way home. Finally she burst out with "And so, you seen a baseball player. So what?"

Now that Ralph Wheelright is set as a writer at Metro, Otto Winkler may soon follow suit. When Mr. Tamms, J. Edgar Hoover's right-hand man, was here he gave all the data on the notorious Bentz, master mind behind a great many bank robberies. Which has made a swell yarn. Incidentally, Bentz was a famous collector of first editions—first in everything, including the vaults!

Warners are gathering up all their blow-ups to give the exhibitors their annual laugh. They've got some honeys this time, with Bette Davis and Ann Sheridan leading with those blue notes. Wish all the studios would bunch 'em together—what a short that would make. Good as Disney's "Going Hollywood." The blow-ups prove they've already gone!

Ray Hatton, former co-star with Wally Beery, has been doing lots of those Westerns with Roy Rogers. In the silent days he became so popular with fans throughout the country, that he now gets equal billing. Hollywood forgets—fans remember.

Columbia

The Hardys, who have their own particular fans, numbered among the thousands, go into their second week downtown in "Out West With the Hardys," at the Columbia. Andy, adorned in fuzzy chaps and ten-gallon hat, meets his match in little Virginia Weidler, freckled little toughie who can lasso, ride, shoot and do all the things he feels any basketball hero should be able to perform with elan.

As in all the Hardy pictures, Andy gets all full of himself, bubbles over with exuberance, comes a cropper, runs home to his father, the Judge, resolves to become a bigger and better man. For both parents and children, there is undoubtedly a moral somewhere secluded; it does not cloy the palate because it is good stuff and well done.

There is something about how these two old friends of the Judge's are about to lose the fine ranch where the Hardys come to vacation, but this minor difficulty is smoothed out, along with Big Sister's latest love fixation and Andy's current and ever fascinating crop of problems.

In an Our Gang comedy, Alfalfa barely escapes a tonsilectomy and the rest of the crew get ill on too much food in too great a variety.

A new twist is given to the Wolf-Little Red Riding Hood story in a Terrytoon cartoon, which has Grandma biffing the bad wolf into a state of abject terror.

In the newsreel there is a clip about Tom Mooney which is timely and informative, along with a collection of other pertinent subjects.

The entire bill is fit not only for family consumption, but for anyone who has the need to relax happily for a few hours.

Ex-Comedy King Makes Comeback

Although the last comedy he made was in 1928, Monty Banks, the actor, is staging a comeback.

The famous two-reelers of the roly-poly funny man have been transformed in England into 16 mm. film, sold for home projection, and have entered the "big ten" for sales. Banks draws a royalty on them and is getting more money from the 1920 subjects than when he made them.

One of England's foremost directors, Banks is visiting in Hollywood, where he was the comedy king of the youngsters for eight years. He recently completed for Twentieth Century-Fox in London the Gracie Fields' picture, "Smiling Along."

G-Men and Spies Put On Merry Tilt in 'Smashing Spy Ring'

"SMASHINGG THE SPY RING." Columbia picturization of a story by Dorrell McGowan and Stuart E. McGowan, adapted to the screen by the authors and Arthur T. Horman, featuring Ralph Bellamy and Fay Wray, with Regis Toomey, Walter Kingsford, Ann Doran and Warren Hull. Directed by Christy Cabanne. Reviewed Friday afternoon by Mary Harris. At the Metropolitan Theater.

It's catch-as-catch-can, no holds barred, in this opus of spies versus G-men, "Smashing the Spy Ring." Excitement is the picture's essence, naturally, but there's plenty of extra authentic interest in the technic of both spies and spy-catchers.

Thus action starts with a couple of rowdy workers in an airplane factory getting into a rough-and-tumble over a trifle and being dragged out by the company police. But no sooner are they in the offices for a presumable calldown than it turns out that the boys are G-men. The worker they suspect is brought in to them on some pretext about erroneous checking out and the boys go to work on him, finally finding some important maps or charts, or something, in the bottom of his thermos bottle which he claims doesn't really belong to him.

Meanwhile, there is another respectable looking spy in the company offices. This smug fellow strolls out to get a pack of cigarettes, leaves his newspaper on the counter of the cigar store. The store owner picks it up and is able instantly to discover by means of a half-worked crossword puzzle that Operative So-and-so has been picked up. He telephones to Washington and gives the bad news to the Head-Spy-der, a prominent psychiatrist. So-o-o, the doctor calls up somebody in nothing flat and it happens that as the suspect is being bundled into a car for further questioning, along comes a car full of gunmen and the poor subspy is sent to Kingdom Come where he may talk to God but certainly not to the G-men.

Two Amiable G-Men

That's just the beginning of the pleasantly homicidal action of "Smashing the Spy Ring." The two G-men, who happen to be Ralph Bellamy and that amiable Irisher, Regis Toomey, of whom we've seen too little of late, are transferred to Washington, which (glory be!), is peopled by the spy elite, also Ralph's best girl, Fay Wray, whose brother (this gets complicated) is also a G-man elite, and just ready to contact the Head Spy with a fake sale of airplane blueprints.

Fay's brother, a nice-looking youngster whom we couldn't place, visits a glamor girl at the Club International (where is that spot?) and receives a Borgia gift of a ring, which places him on the spot when he attends the spy lodge meeting, pledges allegiance to the "mother country." After the spy party, he's taken home in the best tradition of hospitality, kindly bumped off by a blast in the back in his own apartment lobby.

But, goodness and gracious! We're telling you everything. Not another word to spoil the yarn. Except that you will enjoy the experimental sessions in the gas chamber with an Army officer submitting himself as a gas guinea pig and not doing so good. Note. And if you have a grain of vulnerability in your soul, you'll love the psychiatric "rib" that Messrs. Bellamy and Toomey put over on the psychiatrist. Ah-hah! Also there's a rarity in the Chief Rascal's technic of sending X-ray pictures abroad which, when developed, prove up as military plans instead of views of moderately cracked skulls.

"America Needs a Laugh"

"Smashing the Spy Ring" is really great fun for the majority of us folks who like detective yarns and brain-quizzes. It's a B-picture, according to Hollywood grades (sometimes we wonder about Hollywood amusement ratio ratings), but you'll enjoy it and so will the kids. An extra credit is due to Director Christy Cabanne also to Bellamy, especially in his brain-wracked scenes, and sturdy Regis Toomey. Fay Wray is excellent, too, in a limited part. It was very, very good, and our only suggestion is—make 'em louder and funnier, especially as to that spy technique. America needs a laugh.

The newsreel at the Metropolitan this week is especially full and worth while. It gives views of everything in the current picture, from Harry Hopkins to the Musica Brothers, with a lighter light imparted by a golf match between Bing Crosby and Bob Hope.

There's also a musical short starring Wini Shaw, the "Lady In Red," remember? And Edgar Kennedy and that astonishing old gaffer, Bill Franey, will leave you shaking with laughter even though you must face the outside sleet.

Icicles there may be, but they're not in the Met.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Jan. 13.

BOOK DEPARTMENT: The front pages announced that Federal officials had unearthed some secret diaries which had been kept by F. Donald Coster-Musica and that these books were rushed to Washington immediately . . . As a matter of fact, these aren't diaries—and there never were any diaries . . . They merely are compilations of blackmail payments made by Coster in recent years . . . All the people mentioned therein were apprehended weeks ago.

THEATER DEPARTMENT: Jack Kirkland's new show, "Tell Me Pretty Maiden," is ready to go into rehearsal . . . Nancy Carroll, Kirkland's first wife, was suggested to portray the leading role . . . Miss Carroll read the script, decided that she couldn't appear in it, but liked the play. And so this new play, by the author of "Tobacco Road," is being financed, in part, by his former wife.

SOCIAL NOTES: Harry Hopkins, the new Secretary of Commerce, received a congratulatory message from a lady he knows, wishing him success in his new job and hoping to see him in Miami again this winter . . . "Thanks for your message," Hopkins replied. "I'm sorry, I'll be too busy to go to Miami this year, but tell me—what can I do to improve business there?"

HELP WANTED: Hopkins, who testified before the Senate regarding his fitness, read the testimony of three Washington columnists—Arthur Krock, Frank Kent and Joe Alsop—in which they attributed to him the line: "We'll spend and spend and tax and tax and elect and elect" . . . Each quoted an unnamed source—and Hopkins denied the statement . . . "Who was that 'source'?" Hopkins was asked last night . . . He mentioned the name of the Broadway producer whose identity was disclosed in this column some months ago.

EMPLOYMENT DEPARTMENT: A Pulitzer Prize political cartoonist for a local paper drew a New Year's cartoon showing Old Man 1938 welcoming the cherub, 1939 . . . His editor thought the infant was made to appear too scrawny, and so another staff artist sketched fattening lines . . . The cartoonist complained, and a compromise was effected—he got two weeks' extra vacation.

LOCAL NEWS: Lamar Hardy, who resigned a United States Attorney in New York, will join the law firm of Davies, Auerbach & Cornell . . . Contrary to all reports, the G-men are not interested in the Coster-Musica case—because they haven't been asked . . . One of Jack Benny's closest friends "put the finger" on him in the smuggling case . . . A major radio chain soon will present a "Tolerance Hour" . . . George F. Baker 3d, whose family owns the First National Bank, is getting $18 a week as a messenger there . . . The house of George T. Bye, agent for Mrs. Roosevelt, was struck by lightning last week—and Bye mistakenly summoned the fire department of another city.

RADIO DEPARTMENT: On "Information Please" this week the guest experts were asked to identify "Mary Lyons" . . . Oscar Levant's reply was: "Leonard Lyons' wife" . . . I didn't raise my wife to be a wrong answer on a quiz broadcast . . . Her name is Sylvia.

ILLUSTRATED DEPARTMENT: The next issue of Look magazine will feature the results of its Beauty Contest . . . It will reveal that neither Marilyn Mesere—who was "Miss America" last year—nor Brenda Frazier, the Glamour Girl, received a single vote . . . Hedy Lamarr won it.

FINANCE DEPARTMENT: At the Attorney General's dinner, tendered to Homer S. Cummings on the eve of his returning to private law practice, Jim Farley announced: "And whenever I went to Cummings for advice, I got it freely" . . . "No more," assured Cummings. "No more."

POLITICS: Cummings listened to the laudatory speeches of Cordell Hull, Justices Roberts and Reed and other men holding high office in Washington—all of whom expressed regrets at his retirement . . . "I was almost moved to withdraw my resignation," Cummings confessed later, "but I didn't want to embarrass Frank Murphy."

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT: The newspaper men assigned to the Attorney General's office presented a brass humidor to Mr. Cummings as a memento of his regime . . . "Why a humidor?" Cummings asked . . . "To remind you of the cigars you used to give us," he was told . . . "But why brass?" he continued . . . "Well," the spokesman for the reporters explained, "that's to remind you of Washington newspaper men."

Mary Haworth's Mail

Mother Complains That Defiant Teen-Age Children Are 'Driving Her to Her Grave;' What to Do?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am the mother of two children, a daughter 12 years of age and a son 17. I hate to admit it, but they are driving me to my grave. I really don't know what I'm going to do. They are very much spoiled. What I mean is, their father has always given them their way and now it's up to me to bear the burden. The children don't have any respect for me at all. They abuse me terribly; say I'm crazy and that I should be put away.

Their father just sits and grins through such scenes. When I try to correct them, they just ignore me. My husband is that way, also. When I say anything to him, he just walks out on me. I never hear a pleasant word at home. Please tell me what to do. Sometimes, I feel as if I ought to end it all. FRANTIC MOTHER.

DEAR FRANTIC MOTHER: The mother who can conceive of no program for dealing with such a situation as this; who childishly admits that she sometimes feels she "ought to end it all;" whose personality is so ineffectual, so lacking in force and authority, that her children regard and openly address her with scorn and derision—that mother is a person who needs re-education quite as badly as her children need it.

No doubt your husband's non-co-operation has been a vital contributing factor to the children's flagrant disobedience and defiance, but one wonders whether you may not be in some measure responsible for his lack of teamwork. Perhaps, without meaning to, without realizing—or understanding in what way—you have done so, you have alienated his sympathy, forfeited his respect, incurred his secret ill will, so that he derives a certain morbid satisfaction from seeing you suffer at the children's hands. His tacit encouragement of their misbehavior may be his way of passively taking revenge for real or fancied grievances of a purely personal sort.

I have just discussed your problems—as stated—with an authority in the field of child training, who says: "One tends to feel, definitely, that the mother herself is largely at fault. One thinks, in shaping a reply, that the nature of her complaint gives evidence of a difficult situation, all around, in the home; and that the children's trying behavior is an inevitable and involuntary response to that situation. I think this mother needs the advice and help of a trained worker in analyzing and solving the various aspects of the whole problem."

Such help is available to you through the Washington Institute of Mental Hygiene, 1464 Columbia road northwest, telephone ADams 1033, which exists for the purpose of treating problems having to do with emotional, social and domestic conflict, and which gives special attention to the specific ailments of individual personalities. The Institute includes a Life Adjustment Center, which concerns itself with the problems of adults, and a Child Guidance Clinic, devoted to emotional and social problems of children and youth. I suggest you make an appointment for confidential interview, and follow the suggestions of that person who is assigned to help you. M. H.

Wants Two Shoe Buttons

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: There is a doll I want to make—a character doll fashioned after Johnny Gruell's "Raggedy Ann" character. To make it authentic, I need to bright, shiny, black shoe buttons for eyes. So, will you please print this—inquiring if anyone, anywhere in the city of Washington or elsewhere within reach of your column, has or can obtain two old-fashioned shoe buttons?

I realize they are practically non-existent, but there must be a couple of them somewhere that I could obtain. If anyone can oblige me in this matter I shall be eternally grateful to them (and to you). I can be reached by telephone—NOorth 9049. Sincerely yours,

FAITHFUL READER.

Why Girls Don't Marry

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: The letter from the matrimonially-minded bachelor of 60, and the many replies thereto, present an interesting picture of social conditions existing in Washington and elsewhere. While widows and divorcees may be able to remarry with comparative ease, nevertheless it is my opinion that they do not make better matches than the young or middle-aged woman who goes to the altar for the first time. I know of a number of cases in which the women were well-nigh 50, when they married happily and thereafter "stayed put."

A girl who is innately refined and whose family background is a matter of pride, will remain single to the end of her life rather than marry someone who does not measure up to her standard of desirability; and this despite the fact that she may yearn unceasingly for a home and family of her own . . .

After reading the mail addressed to him through your column, this poor bachelor's head will probably be in such a muddle that he will have even less idea than before what sort of wife he wants. The net result probably will be that he will decide to remain unmarried to the end of his days.

Ideal Basic Outfit On Small Budget Is Suggested

Style inquiries to the Fashion Editor will be answered in, the Fashion Forum which will appear periodically.

By Marshall Adams,
The Post Fashion Editor.

PORTS OF CALL are beckoning us from every shop window, and as they do requests for information on travel wardrobes are being received. Whether your Lorolei instinct calls you to South American countries, or whether pennies are being saved for a short week's cruise to Cuba, the correct clothes are an important adjunct to the journey.

Requests for authoritative data on an essential West Indies wardrobe have been so persistent that the Fashion Forum has asked a travel expert for advice. She is Mrs. Laura L. Waters, a local travel tour manager, whose wanderings have taken her 30 times across the Atlantic, 10 times to Bermuda and almost as many times to Havana. She thus gives her formula for the ideal basic outfit, which is the most pertinent of cruise style questions:

"The business girl of moderate income planning a fairly short cruise needs, as a basic budget purchase, a good woolen topcoat and suit. It may be of cheviot, worsted or last fall's tweed ensemble, in either pastel or darker tones. It may comprise a matching coat, jacket and skirt, or may be mix-matched for greater wardrobe variety. It is the flawless going-away outfit and very necessary for those first cold days of ocean traveling. One or two alternate sweaters and a contrasting skirt change a suit's complexion from day to day."

Other Queries Answered

Following are other queries answered by Mrs. Waters:

How many afternoon dresses are necessary for midwinter cruising?

"The afternoon dress, as such, is passe. In its place is a simply designed day-time dress now in vogue, right for dinner and informal evenings aboard deck. Neatly spaced prints in silk or sheer are best. Removable jackets or boleros make for versatility in interchanging accessories."

Is it obligatory to take very formal gowns along? Which fabrics are most suitable?

"Elaborate formal gowns are unnecessary. Convertible, dinner-jacketed gowns are right for either the captain's table or for cooler moonlight deck strolls. Laces, nets, chiffons or cotton meshes are best for packing and coolness. Taffeta and crushable silks are taboo."

Correct Play Togs

How many sports outfits and play togs are essential? Are shorts and slacks in favor?

"As a rule, two or three colorful wash frocks are sufficient for active days of deck tennis or ping pong. The newest resort cottons and linens in the stores are exhilarating, although, on a close budget, last summer's play togs may be revived. One becoming bathing suit is an essential, except in Bermuda, where at this time of year it is too chilly to try water sports. Shorts and slacks should be shunned by those who can't boast a perfect 36."

Clothes Should Be Bought With Eye To Later Needs

What about hats? How many and what types? Are they even necessary?

"One becoming hat is absolutely all that is necessary for a two-week cruise and shore duty. Collapsible berets and stitched-fabric or woolen hats are practical. The going-away hat is the only one needed for short stopovers at Kingston, Puerto Rico, etc. A back snood or evening net is a good precaution for keeping wind-swept curls in place at night."

Furs Are Unnecessary

Is it unwise to carry furs and a number of accessories?

"On the whole, yes. Furs of fine quality are a responsibility. They are useless in warmer climates, and salt water is not the best thing in the world for them. They are a nuisance, always being tucked in and out of ship's safe, too. Collapsible belts, noncrushable scarfs, and link jewelry, which fold away into nothing, are advised in preference to a great number of fragile appurtenances." (The cowhide and copper belt sketched above folds up like a jackknife.)

Milk Affects Ability to See In the Dark

Vitamin A Acts Upon Retina in Back of Eyes, Experts Find

By Ida Jean Kain.

IF YOU have trouble finding a seat in a dark theater, it might be a good idea to check your diet for the vitamin A-rich foods. Unless your body has stored this vitamin in sufficient amounts, the retina in the back of the eye cannot adjust easily to changes of light and dark.

Preposterous as it may sound, inability to see in the dark may be caused by the failure to drink your milk, eat your carrots or to include in your diet other such rich vitamin A sources as cream, egg yolk, spinach or codliver oil.

This and other fascinating new developments along nutritional lines were discussed by Dr. Helen S. Mitchell, director of Home Economics Research at Massachusetts State College, when she spoke recently at a meeting of the Greater New York Dietetic Association. Dr. Mitchell is considered one of the foremost authorities on nutritional research and her talk brings us right up to date on our vitamins and minerals.

Overemphasized for Colds

Dr. Mitchell expressed the opinion that while vitamin A appears to be increasingly important to eyesight, it seems to have been overemphasized as a cold preventive. Other vitamins, particularly C with its healing properties, have considerable bearing in cold prevention.

Vitamin C is important for other reasons . . . It is now listed along with calcium and phosphorus as an important factor in the health of the teeth. You will keep your teeth longer if you get your vitamin C foods—citrus fruits and juices, tomatoes, lettuce and raw cabbage.

You will be interested to know that not only are calcium and phosphorus needed in children's diets to make strong bones, but manganese must be present in adequate amounts to allow the bones to attain their natural length.

As nutritional research goes on, we are more and more impressed by the far-reaching influence of these important food elements. Dr. Mitchell reports that both vitamin C and vitamin B are now under observation for the part they—or the lack of them—play in anemia! Usually anemia is associated with an iron deficiency.

Vitamin B Affects Heart

Then there's vitamin B, which figures so importantly in the muscular functioning of the heart . . . It may be more than a coincidence that heart disease occurs most frequently in older persons—the ones whose diet is most apt to be seriously lacking in vitamin B. Even the average diet is easily deficient in this vitamin, and as we grow older and get into a rut in our way of eating, there is a tendency to eat less of the whole grain cereals and breads which supply it most liberally.

Another very interesting point brought out by Dr. Mitchell is the increased need for vitamins in cases of thyroid deficiency, as shown by experiments conducted by Dr. J. R. Murlin, of the University of Rochester. The person with a thyroid deficiency is apt to lean toward overweight and to a diet shy in vitamins, whereas the deficiency seems to make it more than ever necessary that those elements be included.

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay

Aides to St. Peter

Mrs. Bellwether—Ladies, as of course you know, the time for the annual Barnyard Frolic dance is approaching and I think we should decide on the list of younger girls to be invited.

Mrs. Hardpann—I have some girls to propose who are really very charming. The first is little Marjorie Beetle—you know, the Buffington Beetles.

Mrs. Ermine—WHO are the Buffington Beetles?

Mrs. Hardpann—They're very lovely people. They've taken the old Mildew house.

Mrs. Van Tinsel—They're very new here, aren't they?

Mrs. Hardpann—Yes, but they give very lovely parties. They serve perfectly delicious food, and they have beautiful cars—

Mrs. Bellwether—Beetle? . . . Beetle? . . . Where did they come from?

Mrs. Hardpann—I think it was from somewhere in the Dakotas.

Mrs. Stalactite—The Dakotas? Where in the Dakotas? East or West Dakota?

Mrs. Hardpann—I don't know. Maybe it was one of the Nebraskas. Anyway, they've got lots of money. Not, of course, that that matters——

Mrs. Bellwether—Oh no indeed! We don't want to put this on a money basis. How did they make their money?

Mrs. Hardpann—I think it was in lumber. Anyway, whatever it was, they say the old man—the grandfather—literally stole the whole State.

Mrs. Stalactite—Well of course lumber's very good business.

Mrs. Van Tinsel—Not so good now—

Mrs. Stalactite—Well, it's genteel.

Mrs. Greatheart—Is the mother—this Mrs. Beetle—on any boards?

Mrs. Hardpann—Oh yes. She's on the board for the Refuge for Homeless Aged and she's on the Babies' Milk Fund—

Mrs. Greatheart—Oh, those!

Mrs. Steeplechase—What is the girl like? Can she ride?

Mrs. Hardpann—I suppose so. She goes to Miss Jumper's school.

Mrs. Greatheart—Well I think we ought to look into this matter a little further. I'd like to investigate that connection with the Refuge for Homeless Aged. It's a very new institution. Besides, I've got to go right now to a meeting of my board—

Mrs. Bellwether—Very well. We'll hold up the Marjorie Beetle name.

Mrs. Greatheart—All right. Good day ladies.

Mrs. Hardpann—Well of all the nerve! And when you think of the time she had getting on her board and how nobody on it would speak to her for at least six months—

Mrs. Bellwether—Ladies, let's get on with these names.

Mrs. Ermine—I'd like to suggest the little Dasher girl—little Betty Dasher—you know Mrs. Click Dasher—

Mrs. Stalactite—Oh yes! Her first husband was a Cragg. They're a very good family.

Mrs. Bellwether—But of course this girl's a Dasher—well I guess the Dasher family is all right.

Mrs. Van Tinsel—Yes, but wasn't there something about the mother . . .

Mrs. Stalactite—Oh yes, I believe there was—when she crossed to England on the boat . . .

Mrs. Van Tinsel—Well, I'm very broad about such things, but I do think we ought to hold the name up until we're sure—well that this girl comes from such an environment that we would want our daughters to associate with her. Anyway, I'm due right now at the beauty parlor—

Mrs. Bellwether—Very well. We'll hold Betty Dasher over.

Mrs. Van Tinsel—All right. Good day ladies.

Mrs. Ermine—Well of all the nerve! A woman that's had three husbands and all that scandal—

Mrs. Bellwether—Are there any more names to discuss?

Mrs. Hardpann—I've got another little girl here—little Gracie Squatter . . . you know the Chauncey Squatters. Now of course they're new, but the girl is very talented—

Mrs. Stalactite—Where does she attend school?

Mrs. Hardpann—Miss Sniff's Academy.

Mrs. Steeplechase—That's a very good school. They have a wonderful instructor in horsemanship.

Mrs. Bellwether—How did these—these Squatters make their money?

Mrs. Hardpann—Noodles. Don't you know, the old grandfather was the noodle king—

Mrs. Ermine—Well I would be against taking any action right now. It's not that I've got anything against the noodle business—I know some very lovely pepole have made their money in trade—but after all, we seem to be getting in so many girls of that type. Besides I've simply got to go—

Mrs. Bellwether—Very well, we'll hold up Gracie Squatter.

Mrs. Ermine—All right. Good day ladies.

Mrs. Hardpann—Of all the nerve! A woman who got her money from chili sauce! Say do you know how her old grandfather got his start? Why he had a hole in the wall he called "Ed's Lunch"—

Mrs. Bellwether—Ladies, shall we adjourn?

Why Cakes Fall

Cakes usually fall because they contain too much fat, sugar, baking powder or other leavening agent or because the oven is too slow. If the cake falls after being taken from the oven, the baking time has been insufficient or the cake has too much sugar or egg.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—I have just heard of the season's biggest Christmas present. It was given to Lynn Fontaine and Alfred Lunt by the heads of the Ringling-Barnum Circus, and is now in residence at the Lunt Farm at Genessee Depot, Wisconsin. And, to be briefer than the present itself, the gift is a large lady elephant. Unless Lunt has a lot of logs to haul, I fail to see how the pet pachyderm fits into their cute rural domestic picture. But there she is!

A local society scribe has been saying very catty things about the former Sally Clark, of Boston, who sang unfortunately in swanky night clubs while wearing the world's silliest "Trilby" bangs. He accuses her of being a publicity grabber. Now that she is Mrs. George X. McLanahan she will undoubtedly settle down into quiet young matronhood, and thus deprive society writers of further chances to let off editorial steam.

Already the wreckers are ripping apart the late unlamented Sixth avenue elevated, and its demise has just been celebrated by a big party at one of the famous hardware stores on that newly born thoroughfare. You have no idea how happy we are at the death of the El. I'd like to knock out a couple of rivets myself . . . Russel Wright, the industrial designer has just developed a new fabric he calls Cellini cloth, which is an aluminum foil material available in gold, copper and silver tones. It will first appear on Fifth avenue in such accessories as belts and bags. And I can tell you, as one who has seen it, that it is very original and beautiful . . .

Significant note from a local gazette . . . Carl Schuster has joined his wife, Anne on the wagon. They sipped orangeade at El Morocco the other night. On the whole, what of it? . . . When you look at photographs of our snooty cafes, you can identify two of them whether or not they are named. El Morocco has zebra-striped benches, while those at Armando's are lined with leopard skin.

Louis E. Kirstein, the great Boston merchant has a fascinating piece in the January Atlantic Monthly which will interest all of us who go in the stores to buy. Kirstein discusses two erroneous impressions we have usually held. One is that the customer is always right. The second is that high prices are usually due to wastefully high selling costs. I suggest that you read this brilliant merchant's notions on these subjects.

Carroll 4-H Poultry Team Wins Md. Title

Montgomery Group Is Second in State Judging Contest

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Jan. 13.—Carroll County's 4-H Club poultry judging team captured the State championship here today as farm boys from all over the State vied for honors in the Maryland State Poultry Show.

Oscar Ensor, a member of the Carroll County team, won top individual honors.

Fifteen county teams participated in the contest, which was held in the Fifth Regiment Armory. The youthful judges had to size up eight classes of poultry—five birds in each class—and in two classes they had to specify their reasons for placing the birds in the order they chose.

Other members of the victorious Carroll County team were George Gorsuch and Stoner Fleagle.

Emanuel Walters, George Lechlider and Russell Davis, the Montgomery County representatives, were second. Robert Burral, Melvin Cook and Richard Cook, from Frederick County, were third. The Baltimore County team was fourth and Queen Annes fifth.

Ensor headed the ten high individual scorers, all of whom will be given special coaching and participate in a contest to pick a team that will represent Maryland in the International Poultry Congress 4-H judging contest.

Other members of the three top teams who were in the group included Robert Burral, George Gorsuch, Russell Davis and Melvin Cook. The others were Lynwood Ensor, of Baltimore County; Charles St. Clair, of Harford County; Samuel McGinnis, of Queen Annes; Arthur Bransfield, of Worcester, and James Armstrong, of Allegany.

Does the Public Approve of Mrs. Roosevelt's Activities as the First Lady?

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt is the most active First Lady ever to live in the White House. The controversy about her activities came to a climax after her son, James, asked her to take his place as a member of the board of directors of a Boston insurance firm.

To critics, Mrs. Roosevelt answered that only the President was elected to office, not the members of his family.

Does the public approve of Mrs. Roosevelt's activities? The Gallup Poll had its field investigators ask persons in every walk of life, in every part of the country whether they approved of Mrs. Roosevelt's conduct as the First Lady. This is the first time such a poll has ever been made. The results will be published in The Post this Sunday. The Poll will also show how Mrs. Roosevelt's popularity compares with the President's.

WASHINGTON'S HOME NEWSPAPER

Beatrice Lillie Feted By British Attache

Mr. and Mrs. Sims Give One of Gayest Parties of Season for Stage Star; Vandenbergs Have Theater Evening

Several dinner parties and an after-theater supper given by the Attache of the British Embassy and Mrs. Harold Sims in honor of Beatrice Lillie made last evening one of the gayest of the month.

Mr. and Mrs. Sims, both interested in the theater, have known Noel Coward and Miss Lillie for many years. Mr. Coward was unable to be present last evening, as he had to go to New York yesterday to prepare for the opening there next Wednesday of "Set to Music."

The hostess and the guest of honor were a study in contrasts last evening—Mrs. Sims, tall and blonde, wearing a black gown, and Miss Lillie, petite and dark, striking in a white crepe frock, made on Empire lines with an organdie cape embroidered with colored stones.

The Sims apartment at the Wardman Park is ideal for entertaining, with its large drawing room filled with several comfortable sofas and with a grand piano in one corner. Champagne was served, and the supper included cold meats and sandwiches.

Senator and Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg gave a dinner, later taking their guests to the theater and on to the party. Mrs. Vandenberg wore a printed lame dinner dress. Their guests of honor were Mr. and Mrs. John Frey, who stopped off in Washington for a brief visit en ruote to Florida.

Reginald Gardiner Asked to Party

Among the guests whom the Sims had asked last night was Reginald Gardiner, British actor who shared the spotlight with Beatrice Lillie in "At Home Abroad" a number of years ago. Mr. Gardiner has been working in Hollywood, where his name has been linked romantically with that of filmdom's newest glamour girl, Hedy LaMarr.

Angus Malcolm, Second Secretary of the British Embassy, entertained at dinner before the party, taking his guests on to the Wardman Park. Other members of the embassy staff present were the Charge d'Affaires and Mrs. Victor Mallet, the Naval Attache and Mrs. Curzon Howe, the Assistant Naval Attache and Mrs. Anthony Coleby, the First Secretary, Christopher Bramwell, and Benjamin Plunket, Attache.

Frances Starr, one of the outstanding actresses under the management of the late David Belasco, was another guest last evening. In private life she is Mrs. R. Golden Donaldson, and is a resident of Washington.

Last night's smart company also included the Belgian Ambassador and Countess van der Straten-Ponthoz, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh D Auchincloss, Mrs. Benjamin Thaw, Mrs. Pearsons Rust, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Hinton, Commander and Mrs. William D. Thomas and Miss Helen Davis.

John Hayden, British actor who does an imitation of fish in the show, and Kenneth Carten, another member of the cast, were also present.

Mr. and Mrs. Essary Dine La Gorces

Another dinner given last evening was that at which Mr. and Mrs. J. Fred Essary entertained in honor of Mr. and Mrs. John Oliver LaGorce. The LaGorces leave today for their winter home at Miami Beach, Fla., and have been extensive feted before their departure.

The dinner took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Essary Newark street. The hostess wore a gown of brilliant raspberry red taffeta, made with puffs at each shoulder, and a wide flaring skirt of bands of material which widened toward the hem. The table was centered with red roses.

In the company were the Norwegian Minister and Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne, Representative Walter Byron, recently elected from Maryland, and Mrs. Byron, who have leased the home on Kalarama road of the United States Minister to Sweden and Mrs. Frederick Sterling; Senator and Mrs. Bennett Champ Clark and the latter's sister, Mrs. Genevieve Thompson, of New Orleans, and Lowell Mellett.

The Hunt Country

By Nina Carter Tabb

MRS. WILLIAM P. HULBERT and Miss Catherine Hulbert are en route to Tuscon, Ariz., to visit Mrs. Hubert's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Chittenden.

Miss Louise McKinney, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., a member of the Rombout Hunt there, is visiting Miss Jane Stevenson in Middleburg and is hunting with the Orange Count, Middleburg, and Piedmont packs.

Mrs. John Hay Whitney, Mrs. Eva Stewart Spilman and Harry Worcester Smith were among those hunting with Raymond Guests' Hounds in Clarke County recently. Mrs. Whitney had a fall from her horse during the run, but was not hurt, although her horse suffered a bad injury to his foot.

MAJ. DAVID RUMBOUGH gave a pleasant cocktail party at his home at Fort Myer recently, when he invited a few of his friends from this part of the country. As a young man, Maj. Rumbough spent much time in Washington, fox hunting with different packs and taking part in the cross-country races. In his house he has many large cases holding hundreds of ribbons won at various horse shows all over the country. He will ride in the President's Birthday Horse Show to be held at Fort Myer the end of the month.

AFTER THE cocktail party several guests remained for a buffet supper. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Elwood Seal, Capt. and Mrs. John Meade and the former's father, Charles Meade, of Poughkeepsie; Miss Marjorie Ryan, of New York; Mrs. Louis E. Jefferies, jr.; Mrs. Ruth Lester Buchanan, Mrs. Eula Morgan, Mrs. Mary Burnley Christian, Capt. Hugh Waddell, Senator H. Styles Bridges, of New Hampshire; Sheldon Thomas, Jock Bailey and Philip Cranford.

Offsetting Jazz Influence At Gordon Junior High

Emphasizing Stringed Instruments

Gen. Markey Loses Staff Chief's Post

13 Guard Officers Also Relieved in 'Order No. 1' of Gov. O'Conor

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Jan. 13.—Former Gov. Harry W. Nice's official family, still nearly intact despite the change in administration, saw the beginning of the end today when the former Governor's military staff was formally relieved of its duties.

Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckord, commander of the National Guard, issued "General Order No. 1" vacating the appointment of Brig. Gen. D. John Markey, of Frederick, as chief of the Governor's staff and the appointments of 13 other guard officers as aides to the executive.

Other ranking officers who served as aides to Nice during his administration included Brig. Gen. Amos W. W. Woodcock, Salisbury; Lieut. Col. George Henderson, Cumberland; Lieut. Col. Elmer F. Munshower, Frederick, and Lieut. Col. Harry C. Ruhl, Baltimore.

Busy on Program

Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor, busy preparing his legislative program, has given no indication as to when he will name his new staff or make other pending State appointments.

Should he see fit to do so, the new Governor could dismiss all three members of the State roads commission and make a number of other minor replacements immediately, in jobs where appointees are serving "at the pleasure of the Governor."

Edgar F. Czarra, Hyattsville, Commissioner of the Land Office, and Philip A. Myers, Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds in Annapolis, and John W. McCool, State Librarian, are others subject to replacement at the wishes of the Governor.

Still vacant is the chairmanship of the Board of Motion Picture Censors, formerly held by Dr. Ben Paul Sandy, who resigned late in the Nice term.

To Delay Appointments

Gov. O'Conor said yesterday he did not intend to consider new appointments until "more important things" were out of the way—particularly his reorganization and fiscal programs, for which legislation is now being prepared.

O'Conor also prepared today for early submission to the Legislature of three bills providing for a sweeping reorganization of the people's court in Baltimore.

The Governor, who is pledged to support the bills in principle, said they would be introduced in the Legislature at an early date, probably as administration measures.

The bills, sent to the Governor by Reuben Oppenheimer, chairman of the People's Court Commission, would slash the number of present constables from 56 to 14, provide for appointment of full-time judges on a non-partisan basis, and reduce litigants' cost by more than 50 per cent.

Referendum Needed

One of the bills, providing for the creation of a constitutional People's Court with a chief judge and two associate judges on a full-time basis, would have to be submitted to a referendum in the next general election in November, 1940. It would empower the Legislature to create People's Courts in the counties of the State.

The other two, providing many of the reforms advocated in the commission's report of last June 17, could become effective immediately upon action of the Legislature.

Charlottesville, Va., Jan. 13.—Dr. John Lloyd Newcomb today was announced as chairman of the advisory committee of the McGregor Library at the University of Virginia, following a meeting of the group.

Members of the committee, which held its initial meeting for organization and the passing of resolutions, included Alexander W. Weddell, of Richmond, United States Ambassador to the Argentine; Robert B. Tunstall, of Cleveland, general counsel for the Cnesapeake & Ohio Railway; Judge Henry L. Hulbert, of Detroit, president of the McGregor Fund; Kenneth Moore, of Detroit; Harry Clemons, university librarian, and Dr. Thomas P. Abernethy, professor of history at the university.

Resolutions were passed on care and use of the library and the purchase of additional rare books in the field on American, particularly Southern, history.

The McGregor Library, presented to the university by the late Tracy W. McGregor, of Detroit and Washington, comprises approximately 12,500 items. Of these, 3,500 are rare books, pamphlets and manuscripts. Two thousand more form a special Mathew collection, in which most items are rare and 7,000 are books of general literature.

The McGregor Fund also has provided $25,000 for necessary alteration in the rare book room in the library, work on which will be completed in about a month. Provision has also been made for the collection to be expanded by expenditures of $10,000 a year.

The university will receive $7,500 annually from the fund, which has expressed a willingness to extend the grant for a ten-year period, subject to review at the end of three and seven-year periods. The university will increase the amount by $2,500 annually.

Roads 'Very Bad' in West Part of State, Drivers Cautioned; Rain Seen Today

By the Associated Press.

Snow covered all Maryland last night and snapped the entire State out of advancing springtime warmth back into the midst of winter.

The general storm sent temperatures down to between 20 and 30 degrees all over the Free State.

The State police radio station at Waterloo checked its periodical reports and indicated no serious accidents had occurred. All motorists were warned to proceed cautiously.

Snow continued to fall in Western Maryland's mountains into the night and the State police reports showed road conditions around Cumberland and West were growing "very bad."

Five inches of fine snow and sleet covered Garrett County roads, but Engineer G. Bates Chaires said the main danger was from ice.

The first flakes in the eastern counties this morning came down on blooming japonicas, forsythia and narcissus which popped out during the last few weeks of unseasonably mild weather.

It was the State's first snow in a month.

The Maryland roads commission immediately put 60 trucks and 300 men to work clearing drifts and spreading sand and cinders on slippery spots.

The first fall at Hagerstown melted quickly as the mild temperature held on through the first few hours of the storm, but as the snow set in heavily temperatures dipped.

At Salisbury the early snowfall was so heavy that visibility was reduced to several hundred yards.

Weather forecasters predicted the snow would change to rain over the State by morning and clear up completely over the Eastern Shore areas.

Czech Surrender Was 'Stupid,' D.C. Educator Tells Md. Forum

Dean Pergler Assails Munich Pact as an 'Act of Infamy'

By the Associated Press.

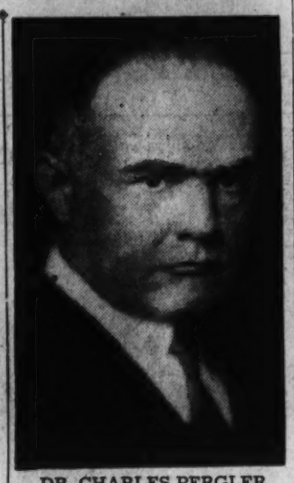
Baltimore, Jan. 13.—A former Czechoslovakian patriot now dean of the National University Law School at Washington, tonight described the whole September crisis involving his fatherland as "a bit of stage management" to obtain public sanction for an act of infamy" already arranged by the European government heads.

"In the history of the world there never was a greater act of stupidity than the surrender of an effective Czechoslovak army of a million men," declared Dean Charles Pergler in an address before the Friday night forum of the Beth Tfiloh Congregation of Baltimore.

Dean Pergler was formerly Czechoslovak commissioner in the United States, first Czechoslavok minister to Japan, and a member of the Czechoslovak parliament. He spoke on "The Munich Pact—and After."

"The pact of Munich and what followed thereafter," he declared, "constituted not only a violation of historical and geographical considerations, but of that very principle of self-determination to which Mr. Hitler appealed . . .

"Indeed, it is not too much to say that Berchtesgaden, Munich, and Godesberg were little more than a bit of stage management to obtain, by fear of war, the sanction of public opinion to an act of infamy which was contemplated from the beginning."



DR. CHARLES PERGLER

Dean Pergler charged that through its Runciman commission the British violated Czechoslovakian sovereignty and that in the final Munich Pact both Germany and France were guilty of treaty breaking.

By the Associated Press.

Winchester, Va., Jan. 13.—A truck driver, tentatively identified by police as Thomas B. Eagle, of Knoxville, Md., died in the flaming cab of his truck-trailer today after it had been struck by a speeding northbound Norfolk & Western passenger train.

Robert Rice Hemp, 18, of Jefferson, Md., a helper riding with Eagle, was critically injured. He was brought here for treatment.

The accident occurred at a secondary road crossing between Berryville and Boyce in Clarke County and about 300 yards north of the Boyce Station.

Engineer Walter T. Miller said his locomotive dragged the truck and trailer about 75 yards before it could be brought to a stop.

John Blankenship, conductor, said the crash set fire to the truck and that the driver was burned almost beyond recognition before help reached him.

Hemp was still unconscious tonight. Hospital attendants said the extent of his injuries had not been determined, although they said they believed he suffered serious internal injuries.

Eagle's body was taken to a Berryville funeral home.

Wanted: Student Who Speaks Latin; Apply at W. & L.

Lexington, Va., Jan. 13 (AP).—Leaders of Washington and Lee's annual fancy dress ball are looking for a student who can speak a little Latin.

"We would like," said Cecil Taylor, of Lynchburg, president of the 1939 ball, "to find a student to speak a little Latin—to portray one of the characters in the fancy dress figure."

A bit of Virginia history is responsible, it seems. The fancy dress figure will represent a ball given by Gov. Alexander Spotswood, of Virginia, in Colonial Williamsburg in 1716. A student will play the role of the Rev. Arthur Blackmore, master of the grammar school at Williamsburg.

History has it, directors of the fancy dress say, that Blackamore read memorial verses in Latin to the Governor in commemoration of Spotswood's successful expedition to the valley of Virginia.

The fancy dress ball will be held February 3 as the second in a set of three dances.

3d Term Club For Roosevelt Set for Action

Block Says Move Is Patriotic Service For the Nation

Washington headquarters of the National Association of Roosevelt for 1940 Clubs, Inc., is ready to fire its opening gun in the recently inaugurated campaign to keep President Roosevelt in the White House for a third term, it was announced yesterday by David S. Block, prominent local attorney and director of the District division.

Increasing sentiment to make Mr. Roosevelt the first third-term President prompted the formation of the clubs by a group of seven men, who volunteered their "patriotic services" in the movement, said Block.

"There is no definite leader of the campaign," the Washington attorney declared. "We all offered to help promote the growing movement because of our political beliefs and American ideas. The clubs have no paid officers—we are doing the job because we feel it should be done."

Block said he opened the local headquarters at his own expense. Although yet in the embryo stage, the program is the nucleus of a large and widespread organization, he added.

"We are working toward a perfected organization which eventually will enlist thousands of American citizens who see things the same way we do," Block siad. "At present we have 16 branches in various sections of the country and we will continue to expand as fast as public support will permit."

The whole idea of promoting the third-term movement was spontaneous, said Block, and the seven founders—all New Jersey business executives—are confident of obtaining Nation-wide support.

Tydings' Action Awaited on 'Plum' At Hagerstown

Hagerstown, Jan. 13.—Maryland political leaders are watching with interest the outcome of the contest for the postmastership of Hagerstown, a lifetime position which shortly is to be filled.

Thomas M. Simpson, who managed Representative David J. Lewis' campaign for the senatorial nomination in Washington County, is acting postmaster, and has been notified that he stands No. 1 on the list of eligibles for appointment. He has been serving as acting postmaster since the death of Postmaster Jacob T. Hartle, having been named on the recommendation of Mr. Lewis.

The Democratic central committee has taken no action on the appointment, in view of the fact that it was elected since Mr. Lewis made his recommendation.

Whether supporters of United States Senator Millard E. Tydings in his recent successful primary and election campaigns will oppose the appointment of Mr. Simpson when it comes up in the Senate, is as yet problematical, it is said.

Deaths of Two Charity Wards Ruled 'Natural'

Aged Women Die After County Moves Them To Private Home

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Jan. 13.—A coroner's jury reported late today that the deaths of two elderly women, county welfare wards, who were removed to a private home and who died within 18 hours of each other, was due to "natural causes." The deaths occurred at the home of Mrs. Amanda Henderson, a widow, at Pikeside, near here.

Coroner Max Oates, after autopsies on both women, reported both deaths due to lobar pneumonia, and there was no evidence of unusual conditions.

The women were Mrs. Ida Bell Widmyer, 67, who died late Wednesday afternoon, and Mrs. Mary Agnes Harrington, 64, who died early Wednesday morning.

The physician who was called to attend the two women held heath was due to natural causes. The two women were placed at the Henderson home some months ago under a DPA policy to liquidate the County Farm. Mrs. Harrington was a cripple, unable to move about, and Mrs. Widmyer totally blind. In December the DPA said it undertook to remove the wards, after hearing complaints as to the consideration given the wards at the Henderson home.

Their efforts to sever the relationship brought strenuous protests from both Mrs. Henderson and the two women, it was stated. The DPA finally executed papers giving Mrs. Henderson full charge of them, and discontinuing the DPA aid. Mrs. Henderson then continued to keep them on humanitarian grounds, the jurors were advised.

Amphitheater Work Pressed At Cumberland

Six Other Projects in New Park Are Near Completion

By the Associated Press.

Cumberland, Md., Jan. 13.—Relief work crews pushed seven projects toward completion in Cumberland's hilltop Constitution Park today and officials estimated that the largest of them—an outdoor amphitheater—will be ready for sunrise Easter services.

Workers already are building the stone stage which will be large enough for a 120-piece band, and rough hewn hardwood benches are ready to be placed for the 3,500 persons the outdoor theater will accommodate.

The seats were built by WPA workers from wood cut on city property at Koon Dam.

The stage is at the bottom of a natural bowl, and audiences will sit facing the wall of mountains to the east. City Engineer Ralph L. Rizer is directing the project.

A wading pool for youngsters, a sand beach for the pool, and a refreshment pavilion atop the bath house also are a part of the work.

Stone base has been laid for 2½ miles of hard-surfaced lanes and driveways through the park area.

Woman Legislator, 25, to Serve On Six Maryland Committees

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Jan. 13.—Twenty-five-year-old Elizabeth Doub, serving her first term as a member of the Maryland Legislature, faced prospects today of a busy future as a member of six committees of the House of Delegates.

The attractive Cumberland attorney, recently graduated from the University of Maryland law school, drew assignments to four of the most important committees in the lower house, in addition to membership on the committees on public records and inspections.

She was named to the second-ranking judiciary committee, the committee on education, the fish and game committee and the potentially powerful grand inquest committee.

Miss Doub's assignments exactly doubled the number given Louis Goldstein, Calvert County delegate, who, also 25, shares with the Allegany County delegate the honor of being youngest legislators.

Delegate Goldstein won appointment to the judiciary committee, the important Chesapeake Bay and tributaries committee and the aviation committee.

The four women in the house generally fared well in winning committee posts. In addition to Miss Doub's six appointments, Mrs. Vesta M. Cary (Democrat), Third Baltimore District, won chairmanship of the library committee, and was also named on the committees for printed bills and resolutions, public hygiene and civil service reform.

Mrs. Lulu W. Boucher (Republican), Allegany, was assigned to the education, currency, library, public hygiene and aviation groups. Ruth E. Shoemaker (Democrat), Montgomery, was placed on the judiciary, education and aviation committees.

TERPS CHECK DUKE RALLY TO WIN, 37-34

Knepley's Goal Saves Old Liners

Maryland Has 23-13 Lead at Half; Russ Bergman Duke's Star With 17-Point Total

Maryland University withstood a whirlwind finish last night to defeat Duke, 37-34, for its third straight Southern Conference basketball victory at College Park.

About 1,000 students watched Burt Shipley's lads lead all the way for the triumph which sent them into second place in the conference standings, just behind the undefeated Washington and Lee Generals. Maryland has lost one conference game, its opener to Richmond.

Until the final five minutes when the Blue Devils, behind deadly set shooting by Russ Bergman, the game's high scorer with 17 points, and Capt. Ew Swindell almost salvaged the game, the Terps were never threatened.

Lead at Half

They took a 23-13 lead at half time and held it through the second half. But as the big clock neared the five-minute mark, the Blue Devils suddenly set about reducing Maryland's 32-20 advantage in no uncerta in terms.

Four times the short, stocky little Bergman let fly from beyond the foul line and four times the ball landed squarely in the net to make it 28-32. Capt. George Knepley counted for the Terps with a basket, but Swindell dropped in a pair and the count was 34-35. But again Knepley, one of the finest players ever developed at Maryland, came to his team's rescue, cutting sharply to take a pass from Eddie Johnson and dribbling through several players to score beneath the basket.

Just as the final whistle blew, Harding, of Duke, drew a foul shot, which he missed on borrowed time.

Terps Start Well

With Johnson scoring twice on quick breaks, which caught Duke flatfooted, Maryland hopped off to a 4-0 lead in the first minute. Duke came back to take the leda at 7-6 and again at 9-7, but they were the last advantages the invaders held.

The Terps hit a hot streak at that point, scoring 16 points while holding the Blue Devils to 4. This 10-point margain was maintained almost continuously in the second half and once extended to 29-17 before the Blue Devils staged their belated rally.

Knepley and Johnson, with four baskets and three fouls each, paced Maryland with 11 points. Swindell chipped in 8 for Duke.

Conference Tables Pitt's Resignation

Action on Panthers' Withdrawal Comes Up Next Month

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 13.—The proferred resignation of the University of Pittsburgh from the Eastern Intercollegiate Basketball Conference was the most important new development today as the central office for Eastern intercollegiate athletics and several of its member groups held their annual meetings.

Pitt's resignation from the basketball conference was submitted by Athletic Director James Hagan on the grounds that the Panthers have found it too difficult to include the necessary conference games in their schedule. The conference voted, however, to table the resignation for consideration and action at a meeting next month and postponed the preparation of its 1939-40 schedule until after that meeting.

Hagan explained that Pitt not only was reducing its schedule but that games with the Eastern members of the conference, Temple and Georgetown, were difficult to arrange at any time.

At the central office meeting, the first annual report of Asa S. Bushnell, executive director, was considered and approved and the following were elected members of the executive council: Gustavus T. Kirby, of New York, representing the intercollegiate A. A. A.; William H. McCarter, of Dartmouth, representing the Eastern Intercollegiate Football Association, and William J. Bingham, of Harvard, representing the various other groups which hold membership in the central office.

The Eastern Intercollegiate Association, the original football body from which the central office sprang, voted to change its name to Eastern Intercollegiate Football Association, in order to clarify its position. The group was organized to simplify the selection of officials for football games.

McCarter Elected

The E. I. F. A. then elected McCarter as its president for 1939, H. Jamison Swarts, of Pennsylvania, as treasurer, and Bushnell as secretary-commissioner. Named as directors at large were John F. Coffey; Fordham; John P. Curley, Boston College; R. M. Hawley, West Virginia; Nelson P. Kellogg, Lehigh; Herbert M. Kopf, Manhattan; Thomas J. McCabe, Holy Cross, and Earl R. Yeomans, Temple.

The Eastern Intercollegiate 150-pound football League, at a separate meeting, voted to apply for membership in the central office. If the lightweight league, composed of Yale, Princeton, Rutgers, Cornell, Pennsylvania, Villanova and Lafayette, is admitted, it will be the fourteenth member.

Ruppert, on Deathbed, Grips Ruth's Hand, Heals Old Breach

Calls Slugger 'Babe' and Smiles as Former Star Talks About Opening Game

New York, Jan. 13 (U.P.).—Col. Jacob Ruppert died today but in the last, dark hours before he set out on the great adventure he somehow found strength to stretch out a white hand and make friends again with Babe Ruth.

The road that these two traveled together for so long—one the owners of the New York Yankees and the ther the team's greatest player—frked int tw lnesme trails on the day in 1934 when Ruth left the Yankees, a bitter and dissatisfied man. Since then they have been apart.

Death has been on the doorstep of Ruppert's apartment for a week. Suffering from a complication of diseases, the baseball magnate has been growing weaker. Last night he was in an oxygen ten when the telephone jangled and Al Brennan, his secretary, answered it.

"Hello, Al," said a booming voice. "This is Babe Ruth. I want to see the Colonel."

"Come right on up, Babe," Brennan said.

Then Brennan tiptoed to Ruppert's bedside and whispered:

"Babe Ruth is coming up to see you."

Ruppert took a long time to give his answer and when he did it was only one weak wrd: "Fine!"

So Ruth came up, fumbling awkwardly with his hat, his big moon face more serious than it had ever been before.

Ruppert had dozed off and it was a half hour before he spoke again. "I want to see the Babe," he said.

"He's right here beside the bed," said a nurse.

A weak smile lifted the corners of Ruppert's mouth and one hand went shakily out toward the Babe. Both of Ruth's big brown hands—hands that had given Ruppert endless hours of joy when they gripped a bat and arched home runs into the stands—were thrust out toward the bed.

They gripped hands for a moment and nobody spoke. Ruppert was too weak to talkf; Ruth's throat was too full of whatever it is that sorrow puts there. Then the Babe swallowed hard and said huskily:

"Colonel, you're going to snap out of it. You and I are going to see the opening game of the season together."

He was lying and both of them knew it, but once again a faint smile came across the Colonel's lips and he dropped into sleep again. Ruth tiptoed to the door, brushing at his eyes, and as he passed Brennan he said: "That's the first time the Colonel ever called me Babe; he always called me Ruth before."

Tonight there was issued a list of honorary pall bearers and down in the list is this brief notation—"Babe Ruth, to represent former Yankees."

St. John's, N.Y.U. To Meet Today

Annapolis, Jan. 13 (AP).—The St. John's College Basketball team held its last practice today before the big game of the year tomorrow with N. Y. U.

The Johnnies have not played the New York team since 1926, when they lost to the Violet, 47-21. Fourteen years before the Annapolis team won, 25-17.

Tony Tuckey, flashy guard up from last year's Jayvee squad, will probably start for the Johnnies as a reward for his play in the Haverford game. Dutch Lentz, St. John's coach, said that Fred Buck, Dannie Haill, Les Medford and Nelson Shawn would also start at their regular posts.

Smith Leads Oakland Open By 2 Strokes

Snead, Hogan, Ward Trail Veteran Stylist After First 36 Holes

By the Associated Press.

Oakland, Calif., Jan. 13.—Lanky Horton Smith, veteran stylist of the links, posted a 68 and two-round total of 136 today, to move into the half-way lead for the 72-hole $5,000 Oakland open tournament.

A smooth and easy game, reminiscent of the days when he was carving his niche among the big names of the sport, flowed from the clubs of the tall Missourian. His second-round score was identical with his first—two strokes under par for the Sequoyah course.

Yesterday he had a 37-31; today a pair of 34's. Smith's putter was working correctly at the tailend of groove shots down the course.

Smith, who emerged from obscurity in 1929 to become the golf's leading money winner the following year, produced nothing spectacular during his second round, but armed with a new putter, he rolled the pellet into the cup from all distances.

Two strokes behind Smith trailed Ben Hogan, of White Plains, N. Y., yesterday's leader; Sam Snead, of West Virginia, top money getter of 1938 and of all time for a single season, and young Marvin "Bud" Ward, of Olympia, Wash., one of the leading amateurs of the country.

Hogan, with a 66 yesterday, needed a 72 today for his 138. Snead coupled a 71 with his opening 67. Ward, 1938 Walker Cup Team member, trimmed his initial effort of 70 to 68.

In the 139 bracket were Clayton Heafner, Greensboro, N. Ca.; Jim Demaret, of Houston, Tex.; Dick Metz, Chicago; Zell Eaton, Oklahoma City, and Mark Fry, Oakland.

Those with 141s were Byron Nelson, Reading, Pa.; Leonard Dodson, Springfield, Mo.; Harold McSpaden, Winchester, Mass., and J. F. French, jr., San Francisco, an amateur.

Scores of 153 or lower qualified for the last two rounds with 79 professionals and 15 amateurs getting under the wire. More than 150 started the second round.

Barrow, Weiss, Heads

It is taken for granted that Barrow and George Weiss, the head of the Yankee's extensive "farm" system, will continue to administer the property, value of which has been estimated up to $20,000,000. It is assumed the Yankees, who were the separate and distince property of Col. Ruppert, will become part of the fabulous Ruppert estate, now headed by the Colonel's younger brother, George Ruppert.

George never has been much of a baseball fan, having confined himself to the administration of the brewery and the estate's extensive property holdings. None can remember having seen him at Yankee Stadium, so it is considered doubtful he will become active in Yankee affairs.

More likely is the assumption Col. Ruppert has established his Yankees on some sort of lasting foundationo, with perhaps a regency council composed of Barrow, Weiss and his brother George.

Keep Farm System

There is little likelihood that the Yankees' system ever will be offered for sale, at least so long as there remains a Ruppert to remember the old Colonel's pride in his champions. There are few men with enough money to swing such a deal, anyway.

It was a source of pleasure to all who knew Col. Ruppert and Babe Ruth to learn the once great slugger of the Yankees was at the Colonel's bedside shortly before his death, and that Ruppert called him "Babe" affectionately for the first and only time in his life. The Babe's name will ever be linked with the rise of the Yankees.

Ed Barrow Says Yanks Will Go On

Promised Ruppert Club Would Achieve Feat; Regency Is Seen for Team

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 13.—Whatever the details of Col. Jacob Ruppert's will, the New York Yankees will continue on their terrible way, breaking the hearts of the opposition and winning world baseball championships for their late beloved owner.

RUPPERT

Only a few of his most trusted lieutenants know what provision the little colonel made for the perpetuation of his vast baseball empire, yet none who know his love of the Yankees doubts that he has arranged for their future.

"The Yankees will go on," said the club secretary, 70-year-old Ed Barrow, who built the great baseball machine with the unlimited backing of Ruppert's money. "We all have to live out our lives, like the Colonel did. I promised him we would win a fourth straight world championship for him."

The 71-year-old owner of the world's champions passed away this morning after a lingering illness. Even though wracked by pain and confined to his bed many months by his affliction, the colonel never forgot his brilliant diamond achievements.

Troy Haymakers Play Brewers

Popular prices and new faces will be featured by Washington Heprich Brewers tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock when they oppose Carl Husta's Troy, N. Y., Haymakers in an American Basketball League game in Heurcih gymnasium, Twenty-sixth and D streets northwest.

Waverly Wheeler, Fred ("Knocky") Thomas and Cliff Keyser, colorful youngsters recently disqualified in Heurich Amateur Basketball League play by the District Amateur Athletic Union on charges of professionalism while representing Delaware and Hudson, will be featured by Heurich Brewers. Hal Chillcotte, ppoular Alexandria, Va., boy and former Elon College stra, also is expected to see action.

Carl Husta's veteran Troymen will be seeking their third consecutive victory over the local Brewers, having previously defeated Heurich by scores of 38 to 19 and 35 to 27.

Here's the Answer to Duffer's Problems

The golf addict, with an aggravating slice or hook can take a new lease on life—if he can hit a golf ball with a softball bat. He may play pitch-golf, invented by M. M. Marquardt (above), a justice of the peace in Golconda, Ill. The game is played with golf rules on a regulation course—except the softball bat (a baseball bat will do) is used instead of a drvier and other golf clubs. Instead of addressing the ball on a tee or on the ground, the player throws the ball in the air and strikes it with the bat until the green is reached. Then he attaches a putter device to the bat and completes the hole

Bucky Harris

Chapter Seven

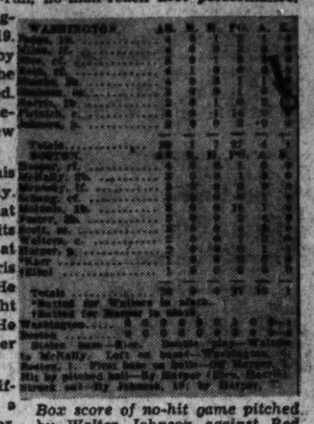
BECAUSE BUCKY HARRIS WAS PLAYING second base for the Washington club on a July afternoon in Boston in 1920, Walter Johnson's 21-year career as a major league pitcher lacks the coveted boast of a perfect game—the no-hit, no-run, no-man-reach first performance.

Harris had reported to the Washington club late in the season of 1919. Bought from Buffalo for $5,000 by Clark Griffith, he was sent into the line-up on the first day he reported. The Nats were playing a doubleheader with the Yankees in New York.

Manager Griffith greeted his rookie second baseman cordially. "I hope you brought along that same bat you made all those hits with that day I scouted you at Buffalo," he said. Young Harris took Griffith's words seriously. He was dismayed. He hadn't brought the bat along. It wasn't his. He had been borrowing it from another Buffalo player.

"I never liked that bat, Mr. Griffith," he said bravely. "I've got a couple of others that are better. But I can send for it if you think I ought to."

Griffith dropped the matter of the bat and told Harris he was starting at second base. Walter Johnson was pitching for the Nats in the first game against Carl Mays, of the Yankees. In his first time at bat, Harris took two futile swings at Mays' underhand pitches and then was a happy lad when Mays hit him in the ribs and put him on base.



Box score of no-hit game pitched by Walter Johnson against Red Sox on July 1, 1920. Arrow indicates error by Bucky Harris which deprived Johnson of a no-man-reach-first performance

THE GAME WENT 13 INNINGS, the Yankees winning, 5 to 4. Bucky, in his second time at bat had singled to drive in two of the Washington runs. But in the thirteenth inning, a short fly off a Yankee bat fell safely into short right center and won the game. Harris, Clyde Milan and Sam Rice had given chase to the ball and it should have been an easy catch. But they pulled the Alphonse-Gaston act and the winning run crossed the plate.

Harris tramped disgustedly back to the dressing room, wondering what Griffith might say. But not before he had paused to admire the reaction of Walter Johnson who had been beaten by a brutal break in the luck. He saw Johnson merely fold his glove and tuck it in his hip pocket when the ball dropped. Not a word did the big pitcher say to any teammate. He wasn't bitter. Harris marveled.

In the dressing room, Griffith was furious. He raged not at Harris, but at Rice and Milan for missing the ball. Milan, particularly, he bawled out. The veteran outfielder, usually a tractable fellow, called Griffith names and said he would quit the club. But he was in the line-up the next day, again on good terms with the owner-manager of the Nats.

Eight games Harris played for the Nats in 1919. It was an ordeal. His broken finger was utterly useless and Griffith benched him. But he was not harsh with Bucky. "Nobody can play with a finger like that," said Griffith. "Take the rest of the season off. There's only a month to play. Go home and get that finger straightened out and report at Tampa next spring."

Came 1920 and Bucky Harris was the regular second baseman of the Washington team. He had beaten Hal Janvrin out for the job and Griffith released Janvrin to the minors. Bucky was getting his hits regularly and winning something of a reputation for himself as a middle man on double plays.

HE HAD SOMETHING OF A SCARE in spring training. News was announced that Griffith had traded Mike Menosky, Eddie Foster and Harry Harper to the Red Sox for Mike Shannon. Shannon was a second baseman and Harris was perturbed. If Griffith were willing to give up three veterans like Menosky, Foster and Harper, he apparently valued Shannon highly, and apparently was dissatisfied with Harris. But at the end of the training season, Harris had the job and Shannon was on his way to the minors.

On July 1, at Fenway Park, Walter Johnson was making a gallant bid for the first no-hit-run game of his career. He was fanning the Red Sox with regularity and with the passing innings, both fans and players were alive to the possibilities. Not a Red Sox had made a hit. Not a man had reached base, moreover, and this might be not only a no-hitter, but a perfect game.

Johnson did pitch his first and only no-hitter that day, but he did not succeed in his bid for a perfect game. Because in the seventh inning a man did reach base. He was Harry Hooper and he got to first because Bucky Harris made a miserable muff on a meekly hit grounder for which he scarcely had to move.

Harry Harper was opposing Johnson for the Red Sox and Johnson earned his no-hitter fairly. The score was 1-0 in the Nats' favor going into the ninth, and Manager Ed Barrow, of the Red Sox, sent in two pinch-hitters. Johnson fanned them both. The last man to face Johnson was the dangerous Harry Hooper. Hooper warned Johnson that he'd have to work for his no-hitter. He was going to try to knock the ball out of the lot. He did hit it. Hard. It was a screaming drive down the first-base line. But somehow, Joe Judge scrambled toward the foul line and speared the ball with one hand. Johnson, always a superb fielding pitcher, rushed to cover first base and he beat Hooper to the bag by a step to take the throw and trot off the field with his first no-hit game after 13 years in the big leagues.

Harris' dismay at having cheated Johnson of a no-man-reach-first performance was tempered a bit, however, by the fact that the one run Washington scored in the game was produced by his bat. In the seventh inning, with Hank Shanks on third and Bobby Roth on first, Bucky hit a hard drive to shortstop. Everett Scott knocked the ball down and made a play on Roth at second, but Shanks was home with the winning run.

IT WAS IN THAT SEASON, 1920, that Bucky Harris displayed his faculty for making good under pressure. He was still very much on trial with the Nats, with his hitting still a doubtful asset. But in 1920 Bucky Harris clinched his job by hitting .300 for the first and only time in his major league career. He reached that coveted figure on the last day of the season. The Nats were playing at Philadelphia and Bucky banged out three singles and a two-bagger in four times at bat.

Eddie Collins had been Harris' model as a second baseman. Young Bucky attempted to pattern himself after the brilliant White Sox infielder. He found himself improving. In 1922 he began to blossom as an artist on double plays. That year the Washington Club bought Roger Peckinpaugh from Boston. Peck, at shortstop, proved a steadying influence. He encouraged Bucky to attempt double plays at every opportunity, showed him how to save a step. Harris gained in confidence, and that year he and Peckinpaugh set a new league record for double plays.

Donie Bush succeeded Clyde Milan as manager of the Nats in 1923 and Harris had come to be an important figure with the Nats. In 1921 and 1922 he had not missed playing in a game. By the end of the '23 season he had the respectable batting average of .282. The Washington club had finished fourth, but Griffith had expected better things. He fired Donie Bush as manager at the end of the season. Throughout the winter of 1923-24 the Nats' remained managerless. Harris visited Griffith to sign his 1924 contract, and was somewhat startled to hear Griffith ask:

"Bucky, I think I have a chance to get Eddie Collins as my manager for 1924. He'd play second base, of course. Do you think you could shift to third?"

(Another Bucky Harris article will appear tomorrow.)

Baseball Leaders Express Sorrow at Ruppert's Passing

Griffith Leads in Tribute to Yankee Owner; Honored and Respected by All

Clark Griffith, who will attend the funeral rites of the late Col. Jacob Ruppert at New York on Monday, yesterday expressed profound sorrow at the death of the Yankees' owner.

"The passing of Col. Ruppert makes me very sad. We have had a long and pleasant association in baseball," said Griffith, "and I knew him as an outstanding character and fine sportsman. During his ownership of the Yankees he contributed much to the game and baseball cannot help but feel the loss."

The Nats' owner postponed a vacation trip to Florida in order to attend the services for the Yankee owner.

New York, Jan. 13 (AP).—Horace G. Stoneham, president of the New York Giants, said today "baseball has lost its greatest individual figure" when informed of the death of Col. Jacob Ruppert, owner of the New York Yankees.

"Our club lost a most sincere friend and business associate. Although baseball is now generally in a good position financially, the game can ill afford to lose a man of Col. Ruppert's calibre," he added.

Chicago, Jan. 13 (AP).—Informed of the death of Col. Jacob Ruppert, multi-millionaire brewer and owner of the New York Yankee baseball team, William Harridge, president of the American League, said today "the passing of Col. Ruppert is a shock to me as I know it will be to all members of the American League.

"A genuine sportsman inbued with an intense desire for victory, Col. Ruppert from his entrance into the game surrounded himself with men of experience and keen baseball judgement. As a result, he built quietly and without ostentation one of the greatest and most efficient organizations in the history of baseball.

Buffalo, N. Y., Jan. 13 (AP).—Joe McCarthy, manager for eight years of the New York Yankees baseball team, said today that the place of Col. Jacob Ruppert, owner of the club, who died in New York, would be "hard to fill."

"I am deeply grieved over the death of my good friend, Col. Ruppert," McCarthy asserted.

Chicago, Jan. 13 (AP).—Philip K. Wrigley, owner of the Chicago Cubs, champions of the National League, today expressed sorrow over the death of Col. Ruppert.

"Col. Ruppert was a close friend of many years' standing and a great sportsman," Wrigley said. "His passing is a tremendous loss to baseball, to which he devoted so many years of tireless activity and loyalty."

Eastern Halts Victory March of St. John's Quintet, 20-13

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Max Baer is currently in the East making motions toward a come-back and frankly admitting that he'll murder Lou Nova, knock out "that bum Galento" and inquiring whom Tommy Farr ever licked. Said Baer: "Who did Farr ever lick?"

POVICH

Baer's memory apparently is shorter than his stay in the ring with Joe Louis. Because among the fellows that Tommy Farr licked was a chap named Max Adelbert Baer, of Livermore, Calif., who is currently in the East proclaiming a comeback. Farr licked Baer in a ten-rounder in England, the bout that established the Briton as contender for Joe Louis' title in the opinion of Promoter Mike Jacobs, if nobody else.

It is possible, of course, that Baer may make good on his recent boasts that he can wade through the heavyweight crop that ranks below Joe Louis. Gene Tunney, who used to be a fighter himself, was talking about Baer to this deparment the other day and said he would not be surprised if Baer licked Nova, Galento and all the other pretenders to Louis' title.

"Baer is not game," Tunney was saying, "but I think he would be game enough for Nova and Galento." Tunney inferred, of course, that Baer's courage was not equal to another meeting with Louis. Still too vivid in Tunney's memory was the picture of Maxie's abject flop before Louis three years ago.

Baer Boxes Well

It's plausible enough that Baer could beat such as Nova and Calento. In such as they he would be meeting no Louis with a pulverizing punch. The Baer cockiness greatly, has always been a potent asset. Baer, for all his clowning, boxes well. Except in his fight with Louis, he has always shown an ability to take it. And there never was any doubt that he could hit. His pet punch, a long overhand right, is a numbing blow.

He demonstrated the one time he fought Schmeling that he could take it if he didn't choose to dog it. For eight rounds the German made a mess of Baer and then Maxie whipped over that long right and won the fight. It is a crude punch, as punches go, but Baer throws it fast. As good a boxer as Schmeling couldn't get out of its way. That kind of a punch, if Baer had the gumption to toss it at Louis, might have won back his world championship. It tipped Carnera over no less than seven times.

But against Jimmy Braddock, with his newly won title at stake, the unpredictable Baer dogged it. He permitted himself to be outboxed, and in the late rounds, with his $1,000,000 title slipping away, he scarcefly raised his arms o defend it. When Baer is done with his numerous comebacks, which already outnumber those of the starlings, he will probably be ranked as the greatest in and outer in all heavyweight history.

Sometimes he almost restores the faith that fight experts had in him after he came galloping out of the West to lick Paulino and beat Carnera for the title. Then there appeared to be no figure on the fistic hoizon with even a chance to strip Baer of his crown. Folks began to speculate on the possibility that he would hold it as long as Dempsey. And after his defeats by Braddock and Farr, Maxie showed a new earnestness by beating Farr decisively in a return bout; beating him, in fact, more convincingly than Joe Louis was able to do in a bout with the Englishman.

Best as Front Runner

He'll fight Nova, if the plans of Promoter Mike Jacobs do not go amiss. And it is not difficult to picture Baer winning over the young Californian, who is now rated Louis' No. 1 challenger. He figures to outbox Nova and for him he would have a certain contempt. He's at his best when he thinks he has the edge. It is when he doesn't that Maxie is apt to dog it.

Possibly he would fight Galento, too, if he beat Nova. The Jerseyman, save for his left hook, isn't much of a fighter. The advantage that Baer would have in height and reach would be ludicrous. If he were not so unpredictable, he would be a 1,000-to-1 shot to outbox Galento. But Tony is tough. If Baer failed to knock him out, he might go into one of his spells, refuse to fight, and either drop the decision or get himself knocked out.

But before Baer can be received as even a mild threat to Louis' title, he must re-establish himself by bumping off Nova, Galento and perhaps other contenders. Even Mike Jacobs is shying from the promotion of another Baer-Louis fight at this time. He made one abortive attempt to book it in San Francisco in conjunction with the world fair there. On the Coast where Baer is a native son, he reasoned they might go for it. Certainly New York would not be receptive to another Baer-Louis affair with its promise of a repetition of the last fiasco. But Coast people refused to underwrite the bout for Jacobs.

I don't know why Baer is even attempting this comeback, unless it is to pick up the few thousand that might come his way for beating Galento and Nova. If he does that he will be in line for another bout with Joe Louis. The very thing he should try to avoid.

Welch, Peterson Named Jacket Co-Captains

Ashland, Va., Jan. 13 (AP).—Everett A. Welch, of Long Island, N. Y., and Marshall Peterson, jr., of Lawrenceville, Va., today were appointed co-captains of the Randolph-Macon College football team for 1939, Coach Frank Summers announced. Welch is a halfback and Peterson a guard.

Carter H. Richardson, of Asaland, was named manager of the 1939 team.

Johnnies Well-Checked By Parkers

Defeat Topples St. John's From Ranks Of Undefeated in D. C. Competition

The only undefeated streak among the schoolboys, St. Johns' string of five, came to an abrupt halt yesterday at Eastern High as the Lincoln Parkers, stinging under two lacings by the Johnnies last year, won their third game this season, 20-13. The largest crowd to witness a prep cage game this year jammed the Eastern gym.

After the first five minutes of play, there was reason to expect a White Tide victory, despite the claret-clad Johnnies' habit of coming from behind to win. Fouls by Frank Cady, Johnny forward, accounted for the first three Eastern points. Lenny Mills made one and Les Cooksey dropped two, following his brace of single-pionters with a long double-pointer from near the middle of the floor.

The 5-0 lead dwindled when Joe Gallagher, key man of the Johnny offense and defense, ripped the net with a fast overhand shot, being fouled at the same time by Cooksey. His attempted free throw circled the rim and dropped out. Capt. "Soup" Hancock immediately hoisting Eastern's lead for the first quarter to 9-2 with a long set shot and fast snow bird.

Eastern Leads at Half

St. John's inability to hti the basket continued in the second period. It scored but one point, a foul shot by Substitute Johnny Batchelder. The White Tide also found the man-to-man defense of its opponent too strict, accounting for but three points. Its lead was ample, however, and it did little shooting to emerge with a 12-3 lead at the rest period.

Back on the floor, the Johnnies seemed intent on a comeback. After several unsuccessful onslaughts, Cady came through with a pivot shot, but missed the free try he was allowed on Cooksey's over-guarding.

The chances were good for another Johnnie uprising as the third period closed, the Vermont Streeters having shaved Eastern's lead to a 15-10 count. That was the closest, with the exception of once in the final quarter, St. John's came to tying the score. It brought the count to 17-13 with six minutes of the game remaining, but a follow shot by Bob Custer, All-High transfer from Western, and a one-pointer by Francis Battiste put the game on ice.

Some Tuogh Breaks

Though Eastern's triumph was in no way due to luck, St. John's might be said to have suffered some tough breaks. Gallagher, the sharpest potter in the District, was sadly off in his field efforts, sinking but one. The Johnnies also were found lacking at the foul line, managing for only three single-pointers out of 16 efforts.

It was probably the best officiated contest of the season to date. Phil Fox calling the plays with a speed and accuracy both teams appreciated. Late in the game, personals mounted on stars of both teams and they were retired. Cady was the first to reach the bench, followed by Mills, spindley Eastern center, and Cooksey. The latter, tied with Hancock and Battiste, for scoring honors with 5 points apiece.

Spiders to Play V.P.I., Virginia

Richmond, Va., Jan. 13.—Richmond's Spiders, victoriuos in two of four contests but still badly in need of an offensive, will take on V. P. I.'s Gobblers at Blacksburg tomorrow ngiht and then move along to Charlottesville for a Monday night engagement with Virginia's Cavaliers.

w-wy- ....

Moach Mac pitt who has juggled his lineup repeatedly like a stage magician in an effort to find a winning five was admittedly perplexed at the inability of his basketeers to find the range. A first class Hampden-Sydney team gave them a good scare and the Spiders needed a final scoring splurge to pull a 29 to 27 victory out of the fire.

The Tigers were no mystery to the Cavaliers, however, and Virginia triumphed easily, 42 to 26.

Heinie Manush Picks Yankees to Repeat

Sarasota, Fla., Jan. 13 (AP).—Heinie Manush joined the throng out on the limb today with a prediction the 1939 National League pennant fight would be between the Pittsburgh Pirates and the no longer lowly Cincinnati Reds.

And he also said it would be "the Yanks again" in the American, a forecast a big portion of the baseball world no longer considers qualification for a place on the limb.

The veteran outfielder, currently with the Pirates and in the major leagues for 17 years, said he really considered the 1939 Pittsburgh team the one to beat in the National. He added he wasn't any too sure he would be able to break into the regular Pirate outer guard.

Alumni chapters in Lynchburg and Danville recently recorded themselves as favoring changes in the coaching staff.

Western Beats Little Hoyas by 30-to-9 Score

Red Raiders Score 20 Points in Last Period; Price Stars

Western High's five lazed through three quarters yesterday and then opened up in the final stanza to score a 30-to-9 triumph over Georgetown Prep in the Red Raiders' gym.

Paced by Jack Price and Jimmy Horn, each tallying 8 points, Coach Clifton Moore's charges, after a slow start, presented a dazzling display of ball handling and quick and accurate shooting.

In that fourth quarter Western piled up 20 points whil the Preps made only 2. Price made 7 of his 8 points in that hectic period; Frank Dwyer totaled 6 and Horn as many. Ben Decker, Hoya forward, who took the scoring honors for the losers, made the only Prep score in the last quarter.

Western got off in the opening stanza to a 5-0 lead and stayed in front throughout. Bob Holloran and Horn threw in two goals and Prive added a sharity throw. Charles Devine, of the losers, with a dribble-in, brought the score to 5-2 at the end of the first quarter.

The Little Hoyas gained a bit of their lost prestige in the second quarter, when Wimsatt and Decker tallied, and after Schennker, Raider center, added 2 points, the half ended with Western leading, 9 to 7.

In a junior varsity game which followed the feature, Western's Jayvees downed the Central Lightweights, 28 to 24.

Alexandrians Face Jeqerson Cagers Tonight

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Alexandria, Va., January 13.—Victorious three times in six starts against non-conference opponents, George Washington High School cagemen launch their drive for Virginia Class A Conference honors tomorrow evening, when they play host to Thomas Jefferson High, of Richmond, in the first of eight Central District games carded for the current campaign. The tap-off is slated for 8:15.

The George Washington junior varsity will appear in a preliminary game against an opponent as yet unnamed.

The Presidents' hopes for victory in their conference debut sored today with the announcement that Coach Albert Doran, injured in an automobile accident near Charlottesville on Monday, will direct the team from the bench. He was released from University Hospital this evening, and will be able to serve in an advisory capacity, although practices will continue under the direction of Willis Benner, assistant coach, for another week.

For the opening conference tilt, the Presidents have carded one of the toughest fives in the Central District, the Teejays having ranked as a power in Class A play for the past several years.

Appointment of a five-man board to handle all protests submitted in the future, was announced today by officials of the Senior Basketball League. The board includes Sergt. George Everly, manager of the Police Department quintet; Harry Child, coach of the Alexandria Boys Club; Jim Echols, president of the St. Mary's Boys Club; Bob Darley, manager of the Columbia Firemen, and Frank Cockrell, Armory Hall superintendent. The latter, who of necessity is on hand for all games, played in the 12-team league, was selected to provide a strictly impartial voice from one not connected with any team in the league.

Successful in their opening game against Landon Prep yesterday, Episcopal High School cages will attempt to make it two in a row tomorrow afternoon when they engage St. Paul's School, of Baltimore, in the Centennial Gym, at 3:45.

Violets Shrinking on Football Field

What L. I. U. Needs Is a Good Gridiron Reputation

By Jack Cuddy.

United Press Sports Writer.

New York, Jan. 13.—It takes football to give an educational institution a national reputation. Neither basketball nor baseball will turn the trick.

As proof, consider Long Island University in Brooklyn. At the current writing Long Island U. probably is the outstanding basketball school in the United States. Moreover it turns out a fairly good baseball team every year.

But there are any number of citizens among the metropolitan 8,000,000 who never heard of L. I. U., which has registered ten straight victories this season over the toughest competition that the collegiate hoop game can afford.

So is it any wonder that the rest of the Nation is not Long Island University conscious? Yet it certainly would be if L. I. U. could go to town on the bridiron as it has done this season, and during the past four seasons, on the court. Never in the history of collegiate basketball has any school rolled up such a record. Before the current season, Long Island U. had won 110 games and lost six in the past four years. And it wasn't playing push-overs.

This season Coach Clair Bee and his Long Island basketeers have knocked off Southern California, Kentucky and Marquette, in addition to outstanding Eastern teams, during their ten games. And they still have to play such stalwarts as Toledo, New York A. C., Buquesne, La Salle of Philadelphia and menacing St. Francis of Brooklyn. Eleven tough games remain on the schedule. It's an even bet that Bee's boys will come through their 21-game schedule unbeaten this season.

Just imagine the glory that would come to L. I. U. if it could battle through a tough football schedule of ten games unbeaten. It would be one of the most widely publicized institutions in the country.

And if you think the Long Island brass hats don't realize this, you're crazy. Because good old L. I. U. is going in for football this fall. The school, which is only 11 years old, is resuming the gridiron sport which it tried only in the season of 1931 and then was forced to drop because of the depression. During the 1931 season the L. I. U. gridsters won seven games and lost one.

Aside from its record-breaking basketball accomplishments, Long Island U. is one of the most intriguing educational institutions in the country. When it was endowed in 1927, it was called Long Island University, because its founders expected that it would function at Garden City, Long Island. While waiting for the college buildings to be constructed, the university was opened in temporary quarters in Brooklyn—in various office buildings. Its campus was the Brooklyn pavements. But when the depression came, the endowments—based largely upon real estate—were insufficient to permit building in Garden City. So—LLong Island U. has remained in Brooklyn.

Meanwhile Coach Clair Bee, former grid star at Davis-Elkins and Waynesburg, who had been brought to the school before 1931 to turn out great football teams, concentrated on basketball and baseball.

Uncle Sam to Get All but $12,000,000 Of Ruppert Estate

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 13.—If Col. Jacob Ruppert's taxable net estate totals $70,000,000—sources close to him estimate his gross worth at between $70,000,000 and $100,000,000—the Federal and New York State governments will take all but approximately $12,000,000 of it in taxes.

An employe of the Federal Treasury Department said tonight the United States would collect about $32,000,000 of the first $50,000,000, net, and 70 per cent of all over that amount—a total of approximately $46,000,000.

The State inheritance laws provide, after comparatively small exemptions, for a tax of 20 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $10,100,000, which estate exceeds $10,100,000, which would mean a tax of $11,980,000.

This would make a total Federal-State tax of about $57,980,000—and leave a balance of about $12,020,000.

C. U. Boxers Hosts Tonight To Villanova

Maryland Mitt Artists Invade Duke's Ring; Cards Underdogs Here

By Lewis F. Atchison.

The Capital's collegiate clouting campaign gets under way on far flung fronts tonight, with Catholic University's much maligned mittenmen engaging Villanova's potent delegation at Brookland, while Maryland invades Durham, N. C., for a crack at Duke's Blue Devils.

Plagued by injuries and a dearth of material, the Cardinals inaugurate the season in the inauspicious role of underdog, but the highly regarded squad Coach Heine Miller chaperoned to Carolina last night is a top-heavy choice. The C. U.-Villanova match is scheduled for 8:30 o'clock.

Villanova boasts a line-up including six veterans of the team that dropped a 6-to-2 decision to Eddie LaFond's pupils last winter, a team that rates with the strongest in the East. The final figures on last year's duel belie the fierce intensity of Villanova's punching, for most of the bouts were decided by hairline margins.

Killian Invades

Topping the invaders' roster is Big Ed Killian, the Connecticut Colossus who lost a close decision to Leo Katalinas last winter, and Captain Bill Duffy, considered an outstanding choice for the eastern intercollegiate 155-pound crown this season. Every position is manned by a capable pugilist, however, and the team that Coach Ray Gadsby sends to the post should give a good account of itself.

The Cardinals are counting on Co-Capts. Dave Bernstein, 120-pounder, and Fred Stand, 165-pounder, and Jay Turner, light heavyweight, for points tonight, although they face opposition as tough as they will encounter throughout the remainder of the winter. In the five other classes, however, the material is either untested or of dubious quality.

Tony Messuri, an in and outer last year, will hold forth in the 125-pound class, and Nestor Martinez, vastly improved over last year, gets the call at 135 pounds. Bill Gearon and Geary Strang, both newcomers, have been assigned the lightweight and welterweight positions. Stand and Turner take care of the next two berths, and Julius Stanges, a green but game heavyweight, will made his ring debut against the ponderous Killian. Stanges will spot the Villanova lad some 30 pounds in weight, and a year of experience.

Maryland Line-Up

Maryland's line-up will start with George Dorr at 120-pounds; Bob Bradley, 127; Benny Alperstein, Southern Conference and national intercollegiate featherweight champion, 135; Nathan Askin, 145; Frank Cronin, conference quarter-mile track champion, 155; Newton Cox, 165; Morton Steinbach, light-hevayweight, and Herman Raisin, heavyweight.

All but Cronin, Steinbach and Raisin are experienced, and Cronin, according to Heine Miller, is one of the most promising collegiate ringmen that ever laced on a glove.

Duke, woefully weak in comparison to prveious years when its standard bearers were a power in the conference, lost a 6-2 decision to South Carolina in its debut. Capt. Chuck Kasik, lightweight, and Peter Brooks, rookie heavyweight, are the squad's outstanding leather-pushers.

Rockville Downs St. Alban's, 23-19

St. Alban's suffered its second straight defeat yesterday, bowing to Rockville, 23-19, in the new St. Alban's gymnasium.

The game was nip and tuck all the way, Rockville gaining its ultimate edge in the last few minutes of play. Excessive fouling cost the Saints the game, for the invaders, give 14 chances from the charity stripe, made good 9 while the Saints made only one foul shot.

Rockville enjoyed a 14-10 halftime lead and an 18-17 advantage at the end of the third quarter. Soon after the start of the last period St. Alban's took a 19-18 lead but three successive foul shots, two by Ray, clinched the decision for Rockville.

Ray was high scorer of the game with 11 points. Hannon was best for the losers with four field goals.

Virginia U., Boxers Meet Orange Today

Gailey to Replace Ineligible Simpson In Bantamweight

By the Associated Press.

Charlottesville, Va., Jan. 13.—The University of Virginia boxers, after a brief rehearsal before Coach Johnny LaRowe, departed today for Syracuse, where they will clash with the Orangemen tomorrow afternoon.

In the absence of Coach LaRowe, who has been unable to travel with his teams for several years, the Cavalier boxing delegation was accompanied on its first visit to Syracuse by Al York, assistant coach, and Tom Carruthers, business manager of athletics.

Gailey Replaces Simpson

Gailey, who is replacing John Simpson, ineligible captain, in the bantamweight division, will face Marc Terzeiv, who is also substituting for Syracuse's ineligible captain, Heinz Voight.

Jacobs, a Cavalier veteran, is scheduled to meet Al Duke, a Syracuse regular two years ago who won four out of five bouts. Williams, winner of two out of four as an alternate last year in the 135-pound class, probably will be matched with Bobby Stauber, rated as Syracuse's outstanding boxer this season.

Up from the 135-pound position he held last year, Barksdale's opponent is likely to be Orlando Palopoli, sophomore novice, in the 145-pound class. Truman Southall, Virginia's 155-pound standout, is slated to appear against Stan Kishman, who represented Syracuse in several meets last year.

Hard Punchers

Paired with Bowman in the 165-pound class probably will be Americo Woyciesjes, both of whom are hard-punching sophomores. Parker, who was the Virginia entry in one meet as a 165-pounder last year, has a tentative opponent in Charles Healy, Syracuse sophomore, for the light heavyweight scrap.

The heavyweights, Virginia's Bryant and Syracuse's Bernard Lavine, are new to varsity competition, although Bryant made an impressive record as a freshman boxer two years ago.

The meet is the fourth in the Virginia-Syracuse rivalry. The Cavaliers hold two victories and battled last year's Eastern inter-collegiate champions to a 4 to 4 tie.

Duke Quintet To Test Navy Squad Today

Middies, Improving Rapidly, Are Ready For Blue Devils

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Jan. 13.—Navy's fast-coming basketball team, victor over Maryland Wednesday, gets a sterner test of its recent improvement tomorrow against the strong Duke University five.

Navy's shooting was badly off against Gettysburg College Saturday in the season's opener. Navy lost a 37-33 decision to the Bullets, but Coach Johnny Wilson kept the Midshipmen at constant target practice before the Maryland game, and the improvement was marked.

Capt. Bob Laney and Big George Ghesquiere, center, were sharpshooting from all over the court, and the Middies rang the bell for 47 points.

Navy's floor work in the Gettysburg game was perfect, and the Middies kept their ball-handling edge against Maryland. Norman (General) Lee, rookie guard, played his first intercollegiate game like a veteran, feeding set-ups to Ghesquiere and Laney through both contests.

Duke is one of the Southern Conference leaders, and always presents a sparkling outfit.

WASHINGTON'S HOME NEWSPAPER

Down In Front

With Richards Vidmer

New York, J.. 13.—The bugle call is unmistakably clear. They are sounding "Taps" for the colonel, and even, perhaps, as this is read, the last sweet, sad note will have faded away with his passing.

VIDMER.

There will be many to mourn Col. Jacog Ruppert, for he left only friends behind. Throughout his exciting years, which have numbered more than threescore and ten, he has added steadily to the respect, admiration and even love his fellow men have had for him.

The colonel, as we knew him since he came into the field of sports as owner of the New York Yankees, has been a matter of fact man of affairs, outspoken, candid, blunt and yet always with a twinkle in his eye, hinting of a keen sense of humor behind his dignity and business like manner.

There was no part hypocrisy in his character; in fact, he had a distinct distaste for sham and theatrics. And yet he loved the show. The crowds and excitement of the race tracks when he was a younger man. Later he loved the tense drama of the baseball fields, but only if he could sit inconspicuously on the sideline and watch the show go on.

He didn't want the spotlight of publicity, although he understood that as far as his baseball club was concerned it was important, even necessary. But he wanted the headlines only for his players, its team and its achievements—never for himself, personally. And he lent his presence to the pictures and paragraphs only with reluctance and when he was part of the scene.

He followed the game for the love of it and for the keen enjoyment he took in having the best—of anything. He never though of the profits; only of winning. And if his Yankees could win a world's series in four straight games—which they did four times—although it meant he would not share in the spoils, that's what he wanted most.

His first interest in sports was centered aroung the race tracks, and he collected a very fine stable of thoroughbreds.

But one day he heard that a race had been fixed. That the winner had been decided before the race was run. That came as a terrible shock to the colonel. He didn't know such things ever happened among sportsmen, and he thought of evryone connected with the turf as a sportsman. It was such a shock that he didn't want anything more to do with the turf. He sold his entire stable and got out.

The colonel loved action. He wanted something to get excited about, something that could win and lose. So with Col. Tillinghast l'Hommedieu Huston, a convivial soul and contemporary, he bought the Yankees for $365.000. At the time they hardly seemed worth it, for that was in 1915, and the Yankees were a perennially secon division club. They had finished sixth ahe year before, seventh the year befor that and eighth the previous campaign; but all the other club owners welcomed the millionaires, Ruppert and Huston, with open arms and bland smiles. They promised to help them. Each assured the new men with all the money that he would sell the Yankees one or two of his greatest stars in their effort to build up the club.

And the combination of Ruppert and Huston believed them. They paid outlandish prices for some of the worst, worn-out material that was on the market, looking for a purchaser at any price. And it was a year or so before they realized they had been buying gold bricks.

Then they got mad.

On recommendation of Ed Barrow, then manager of the Boston Red Sox, they bought Babe Ruth from the Sox. This happened in January of 1920. Barrow, one of the smartest men in baseball, later came to the Yankees as business manager, succeeding Harry Sparrow, who died during the 1920 season. The Yanks paid something like $105,000 for the Babe, then a left-handed pitcher, who was quite a sensation with the Sox.

Other players of ability were added and in 1921 the Yankees won the pennant for the first time. Shortly after Ruppert bought out Huston's holdings and since then he has been in complete control of the situation. How well the situatino has been might be suggested by the figures which show that in the last 18 campaigns, the Yankees have won the pennant 10 times, finsihed second six times, third once and only once been any lower.

Teams have been put together, cracked and collapsed, but another pennant winner has been built in the shortest possible time, principally because the colonel never was satisfied with finishing second. He wanted to be first or nothing and he was willing to spend as much as was necessary for the best.

Meade-Odom Combination Again Proves Hialeah Winner

'Comeback Kid' Pilots Early Morn

$6.20 Choice Never Threatened as Jockey-Trainer Combination Wins 3rd Feature

By the Associated Press.

Hiahleah Park, Fla., Jan. 13.—Jckey Don Meade, the "Comeback Kid," and Trainer George Odom, a combination much in demand here since they accounted for the future events on the first and second days of the meeting, did it again this afternoon when Mrs. W. Plunket Stewart's Early Morn galloped home by four lengths in the Indian River Purse.

This was Meade's sixth victory of the current sessin and he rode Green Melon in the day's final for No. 7. These victories put the former E. R. Bradley star one ahead of Eddie Arcaro, idol of Tropical Park rdiers. Meade gave Odom first call on his services last month, the veteran conditioner offering him attractive inducements. Odm already is glad he made the deal.

Mrs. Payne Whitney's lightly backed Slave Song followed Early Morn across the finish line, earning second money by a head over A. L. Aste's Miss Happy, another outsider. Early Morn, fresh and fit after laying off since his victory at Jamaica in October, was a confidently backed $6.20 favorite and ran the 6 furlongs in 1:11 2/5.

Meade at His Best

It is doubtful if Meade ever rode better in his life than he is riding now. Back in the good graces of the officials after his long disbarment, which began here in March, 1936, the squat lightweight veteran is taking full advantage of the opportunity to regain his lost prestige. Florida fans have great faith in his mounts now that Meade has shown consistently good form.

His task on Early Morn was not a difficult assignment. Meade urged the Milkman filly into a wide lead and his mount toyed with the field to win in hollow fashion. Bobbin chased the winner into the stretch, then faded as Slave Song and Miss Happy took up the issue.

Showing a fine brand of speed and courage, the Woolford Farm's Ida Rogers made a successful bow to racing in the 3-furlong opening dash, for maiden 2-year-olds. Warren Yarberry had the bay daughter of Bob Rogers—Alverida away in swift style and the filly gamely held on to a narrow advantage to register by a half length in 0:34 2-5. She paid $22.50. Apron Strings, favorite under Eddie Arcaro, fought for the lead all the way and outlasted Swift Singer by a head for the place.

Carlisia in Victory

The Bomar Stable's Carlisia, a 3-year-old gray gelding receiving his baptism of fire, proved far too fleet for the other maidens of his age in the 6 furlong second contest. The newcomer had worked impressively and drew his share of the play, paying $11. He rushed to the front shortly after the start and continued smoothly to register by four lengths in 1:11 2-5. For the second race in a row, Eddie Arcaro could only gain second money on a favorite. He had Bright Victory under hard urging but his mount could not match the winner's speed, while beating Off Guard by eight lengths for the place.

Arcaro broke through in the third dash aboard the $4.10 for $2 choice. General Howes, saddled by Hirsch Jacobs. Gaona, a rank outsider, was beaten a length and a half while holding a similar margin over Grand Pageant for the runner-up award. Putting Lightning Lady away in the first-quarter mile, General Howes assumed command and held the almost neglected Gaona safe without being fully extended.

That may be said for the big, amiable first baseman no matter what may be the complaints about his fielding. Zeke is pictured lending a hand with the bulbs of the biennial herb at his father's wholesale produce market at New Orleans. He will lend his batting punch to the Giants next season

Rough Riders Victors Over Martinsburg

Roosevelt Quintet Turns Back West Virginians, 26-16

George West, All-High forward of Roosevelt's Rough Riders, paced his team to a 26-16 victory over Martinsburg (W. Va.) High yesterday on the local floo. It was Roosevelt's first victory in four starts this season.

West, after recovering from an appendectomy, poure dfive field goals through the loop for a 10-point total, his highest in any game this season. Ernest Travis, center, and Hymie Perlo, guard, likewise contributed to the winning effort, scoring 13 points between them.

In an unusual start for the Riders, they rang up an 11-3 lead for the rest period and were never in very serious danger of losing. On other occasions, the Riders have found keeping up a strenuous matter.

At The Post

Hialeah Park, Jan. 13.

Dear Al:

Don Meade is in his glory. He is the rough, tough, rip-snorting rider that he was before he got in the big money by signing with Col. E. R. Bradley at Laurel six years ago. Meade is all energy these days. He boots one home, unsaddles, runs to be weighed in and then walks to the jockeys' room with an air that seems to say, "Get me on another one, quick." About the only sad part of Meade's make-up at present is that his brother-in-law and friend, Johnny Gilbert, is on the ground. During Meades' long suspension, Gilbert kept him going. Fortunately Gilbert always has been a better businessman than Don and doesn't need any financial help. However, the Gilbert thing probably will be settled before the spring meetings roll around. If it isn't I have a sneaky feeling that a ripe herring will be drawn across the path of more than one person. Clocker Mike's bank roll dwindled to $317.30 after he dropped 12 slugs on Repeller. But he'll be right in there battling again tomorrow. He's going to $5 across the board on Star of Padula. Trainer Ben Jones has taken second all on the services of Apprentice Warren Yarberry. If you're interested there are 78 riders seeking mounts here. Trainer George Odom, with three feature victories to his credit, would trade these and several more if he could be assured Pasteurized would win the $50,000 Widener on March 4. Joseph E. Widener, president of the local track, has announced a $5,000 prize for the trainer of the winning horse in the race named for him. A $500 gold watch goes to the leading jockey at the meeting and don't think for a minute that Don Meade hasn't got his eyes on it. The Havana race fans should be ashamed of themselves for letting Washoe Valley win over there at 7 to 2 the other day. I would have liked to have some of that myself. Washoe Valley can beat $2,000 to $2,500 horses regularly at distances under 6 furlongs. However, the owner won't send the horse out in claiming races, preferring to retain the game moneymaker. War Admiral is taking his time these days. Trainer George Conway sends the colt out for a gallop every morning and will not start putting on the heat for a couple of weeks. Thanks for the recent increase in fan mail. I dish it out sometimes, so I guess I will have to take some of it.

BILL.

First race—The Valdina Farm entry of Valdina Gold and Valdina Minx seems to have a fair chance in the day's opener. The former has had an enducating race and will have the fine juvenile rider, Steffen, for the saddle work. Say James is said to be a promising youngster. Supreme Chance may get a place in the pay.

Second race—I'm going to make Star of Padula my longshot special for the day. Rabbit Dabson, a real money rider, will do the booting, and if you don't like them long stay off. Just Once is as fit as recent good races and will be ready if the top one makes mistakes. Banner Girl to take care of the others.

Third race—City Judge, with Meade aboard, appears capable of turning back a field of this sort. I'm going to string along. Handiboy and Bread Stripes to fill out the money bracket.

Fourth race—Little Shaver, coupled with Detroit Bull as the Bomar entry, will do a lot of running in this company. The stable's owners are on the scene and the trainer is going to show them something. Robert L. has some clas and probably will force Maeriel into third money.

Fifth race—Crepe seems to favor this long sprint route, and Arcaro can be relied on for a good ride. Gets in light, breaks off the rail, and I see no reason for mistakes. Maedle and the feather-weighted Milk Punch to account for the place and show.

Sixth race—Headin Home must carry 122 pounds in this distance affair. However, he has the class, and with Meade in the saddle I'm forced to string along. Princess Torch gets plenty of weight from these and may be a keen factor. Would Dare is cheap but formidable.

Sevent race—Easiest Way closed like the wind to take that last. Likes the turf course and deserves a pick among these. Wrenace is fit and should run for Jockey Peters. Melody Maid will be on the front end and could last.

Eighth race—Peedeesque seems well placed in the finale. The route is right and the 117 pounds should not stop him. Prince Dean and Maneuver to take care of the others.

Best bet—Easiest Way.

Wheat Prices Decline With Rain Reports

Government Buying Support Fails to Prevent Losses

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Jan 13.—The price of wheat sagged as much as ⅝ cent today to the lowest level of the new year, off about 3 cents from the highs of ten days ago.

Selling resulted largely from reports of rain and snow over much of the domestic grain belt. Unconfirmed rumors of Italian troop concentrations in Africa and German military movements on the Dutch frontier had no apparent supporting effect on grains, although these reports contributed to nervousness of foreign securities markets.

Further buying believed to have resulted from Government activity in filling recent export contracts appeared in the pit, but this gave only temporary support. No export business was reported despite rumors that substantial subsidized sales, possibly to China, are pending.

Exchange Revises Fees to Increase Registrations

New York, Jan. 13 (AP).—A revised schedule of fees for listing securities on the New York Stock Exchange, calculated to make listing "more attractive" to companies and therefore to gain newcomers to the "big board," was made public today by the exchange.

The schedule materially reduces the initial fee to be paid for listing stocks and provides for a continuing fee to be paid over a period of 15 years, so that, as it was explained, "present stockholders are not required to pay for the advantages of the market place to be enjoyed indefinitely by future stockholders."

Major modifications in the new schedule are: Reduction of the initial fee for registering stocks to $50 for 10,000 shares from $120.

Provision for a 15-year continuing fee at the rate of $75 per 100,000 shares for the first 2,000,000 shares and $50 per 100,000 in excess of 2,000,000.

A basic initial fee for bonds and securities of a similar nature of 1.2 cents per $100 principal amount and a basic initial fee of .6 of a cent per $100 principal amount on bonds of a maturity of five years or less. There will be no continuing fee for bonds. The old listing fee for bonds was $120 per $1,000,000 face value.

Profit-Sharing Tax Presents Many Problem

Standard Statistics Review Gives Some Of Its Drawbacks

New York, Jan. 13.—It is apparent that any plan of profit-sharing which calls for a direct tie-up of the employes' income to the employer's profits must necessarily tend to magnify both periods of prosperity and periods of depression, making for greater instability than ever, observes the Standard Statistics Co. in a current analysis of proposed legislation which would provide tax benefits to those employers who adopt plans for sharing profits with their employes.

Proponents of profit-sharing have stirred up considerable support for such incentive taxation, but it is well to remember that there are inherent disadvantages as well.

For example, profit-sharing would tend to accentuate the intensity of business cycles by adding to the purchasing power of workers in times of prosperity, thereby heightening the peaks of swings. Conversely, when a recession developed, worker incomes would be reduced by the loss of the profit-sharing payments, as well as lower wage income, thereby deepening the lows of the cycles.

Furthermore, the orthodox policy is for business to accumulate reserves during prosperous periods, which enables it to cushion declines by delaying layoffs and wage reductions as far as practicable. It would be difficult and perhaps impossible to provide this support if profits were dissipated under a profit-sharing plan.

The highly cyclical industries—those which are very sensitive to changes in the tempo of general business—would be especially hard hit by forced profit-sharing. It is within the bounds of reasonableness to assume that every major steel producer in existence in 1929 would have been forced into bankruptcy by 1933 were it not for the fact that they were able to withstand the huge losses of the depression by reason of past accumulated surpluses.

December shipments, he said, totaled 11,802 and were the largest for any month in the past nine years.

O'Conor May Dare Coast Governor To Culinary Duel

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 13 (AP).—Prospects of a culinary "duel" between the Governors of Maryland and Washington to avenge the Western executive's affront to the dignity of Maryland oysters were bright tonight.

Olympia oysters from the State of Washington, sent by Gov. Clarence D. Martin to Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor, graced the dinner table at the Executive Mansion tonight. Martin sent the shellfish, together with a letter twitting O'Conor.

O'Conor said he was considering the possibility of a culinary challenge to Martin to stage a dinner in Washington, D. C.

"Of course, any Marylander knows there isn't any comparison between Maryland cuisine and anywhere else," Gov. O'Conor smiled, "but I'm willing to let Martin make up half the menu with Washington's finest foods, and I'd complete it with Maryland specialties."

W. Va. Clergyman, 23, Handles Six Churches

Berkeley Springs, W. Va., Jan. 13. The Rev. George Widmyer, recently appointed pastor of the United Brethren charge in this county, is believed one of the youngest students in the denomination to receive such a call.

The Federal Diary

By Scott Hart

ROY F. HENDRICKSON, Agriculture personnel director, yesterday was doing what he could on behalf of the 35 or more persons in the cost accounting section, division of finance and control, FSA, who have had word they will be let out of the service before February 1 when civil service status will be broadly applied under the June 24 Executive orders.

There is an almost dramatic situation. These employes never were of the notion that their jobs were permanent. But they did hope to last through February 1, when the Executive orders take effect to give them status which would enable them to find work more easily some place else in the Government.

In December, official word came that at least eight of the jobs would be terminated in January—a short jump ahead of February 1. The point is that all in the section want civil service status as much or even more than they want the uncertain jobs they have been holding. They sent a committee on Thursday to Director Hendrickson and he began an investigation.

He thinks what is perfectly obvious; that the whole matter of extending civil service is uncertain because no one can predict exactly what Congress will do. Also, it never has been made clear just how long the work being done by the section will continue. And in the face of this—the uncertainty of the work duration—the Civil Service Commission has said that it will not blanket in those employes whose jobs are viewed as temporary. So first off, the status of the jobs must be investigated. The personnel in the section feel that the work could usefully be transferred into another quarter of the FSA.

But there is the situation with February 1 approaching.

CIVIL Service Week—15th to 21st—will be packed with activity that should interest this Federal town. In advance of the week, today and Sunday, the U. F. W. A. sponsors sessions aimed at throwing some light on in-service training for Government employes. These meetings in the North Interior Building will be held today, beginning at 2 p. m., with an evening session beginning at 7:30; and Sunday, beginning at 2 p. m. Dr. Lewis Merian, of Brookings, and Civil Service Commissioner Samuel H. Ordway will be heard. . . . On Monday night, 8 o'clock, the American Federation of Government Employes sponsors a monster mass meeting in the departmental auditorium. The three Civil Service Commissioners, Representative Robert Ramspeck and other C. S. authorities will speak. The Washington Post Cup will be awarded to "Miss Civil Service," the ideal feminine Government employe, at this time. Gordon Hittenmark sponsors a civil service discussions on his radio program each morning of next week, 7:45 a. m., Station WRC. On the program are the Federal Government columnists: James C. O'Brien, of the Chief Examiner's Office, C. S. C., and Carl C. Berger, president, G.A.O. Lodge, A. F. G. E. On Saturday evening the A. F. G. E. will hold a reception and dance for the Civil Service Commissioners at the Kennedy-Warren Hotel. "Miss Civil Service" will be an honor guest. "Duke" Strople is in charge of the dance arrangements.

NOTES: Friday the 13th was not unlucky for the American Federation of Government Employes. In yesterday's first mail was a charter application from the federation's 543d lodge. The application listed 13 members . . . Through WJSV, Civil Service President Harry B. Mitchell will speak at 5 o'clock Monday afternoon on "Civil Service and Democracy," under auspices of the A. F. G. E. The address will be heard over an extensive Columbia hook-up as a part of the national observance of Civil Service Week . . . Tonight's top event: the dance the Missouri State Society will give at the Shoreham Hotel in honor of the Missouri Congressional delegation . . . More and more we hear Federal employes saying this: when squawks are made about the high cost of government, the squawkers single out the Federal personnel as being the major item of expense. Actually, the personnel is a small item in the gigantic expenditures.

Bob Burns Says—

Kids take their young love affairs danged serious an' don't think they don't! You gotta treat 'em with lots of tolerance an' understandin'. A situation came up in the life of my Cousin Wafford, one time, that might have turned out disastrous if Grandpa Snazzy hadn't given him the benefit of the experience that only years can bring. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was makin' its annual appearance at the opera house an' Wafford fell in love with little Eva. Naturally, the family was against it but they couldn't sway Wafford. He said: "She's an angel, an' I won't listen to a word against her!" That's where Grandpa Snazzy spoke up an' brought the wisdom of his years into play. "Of course, you won't," he says, his voice full of sympathy. "I know just how you feel. When I was your age, I loved her myself!!"

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

"When a three no-trump contract is doubled, should I lead my partner's bid suit or the one mentioned by dummy?" asks S. K., presenting a hand from rubber-bridge play in which he was faced with this problem.

"My partner put in a one-heart bid after an opponent (who later became dummy) bid diamonds, and the opponents finally bought the contract at three no trump, which my partner doubled. I held:

♡ 8 7 6
◇ K 6 3
♣ 9 5 4

"I opened the king of diamonds, the highest card of the first suit bid by dummy, which I understood my partner's double called for.

"My partner claimed I should have opened hearts."

When declarer has bid a suit and doubled a three no-trump contract, the partner must lead his suit. The choice of the diamond king in any event would be unwise. A low diamond rather than the king should be played. Declarer as well as dummy may have honors in diamonds, in which case it may be important to hold the king to kill a high card.

A diamond would be the correct lead if partner had doubled but not bid.

"Sunday dinner was spoiled," writes contributor M. U., who took an expensive set to save a slam. "Was I so far off in bidding?" he asks.

"Neither side vulnerable; North-South have a part score of 90 points; North deals, and this is the bidding.

North	East	South	West
2 ♡	Pass	3 ♣	3 ◇
3 ♡	4 ◇	Dbl.	Pass
Pass	Pass

"I sat West and was set 800 points, and did I catch it!

"I held:

♠ Q J 10 6
♡ None
◇ A K J 10 7
♣ 10 8 4 3

"I thought our opponents would not stop at less than a slam, and, taking what I thought was full cognizance of East's pass, I stuck in an intended lead-directing bid."

Undoubtedly East had no business to raise, but, even so West's three-diamond bid was very much on the light side. East, who also must have realized that the adversaries might be on their way to a slam, should not have raised unless he had great distributional support for West and litle or no defensive strength. His only reason for bidding in such a situation is to tell his partner he thinks a sacrifice is feasibile.

It is foolhardy and useless to try to raise the ante for the adversaries as, presumably, they hold most of the high cards, and from their bidding they appear to need no coaxing.

West put his head in the lion's jaws, and his partner held it there. It is not surprising that even the somewhat sleepy lions bit.

Bedtime Story

By Thornton W. Burgess.

How Butcher Got His Name

Butcher Shrike could tell you that this is true. His isn't a nice name. It doesn't suggest pleasant things. But it fits him. It describes him fully in the minds of his neighbors. Farmer Brown's boy led the way across the old orchard and his cousins, Sue and Sammy, followed. He had promised to show them the reason for Butcher's name.

"I suppose," said he, "you have visited a meat market and have seen the chickens and ducks and turkeys and other kinds of meat hanging up."

"Of course, Tommy," replied Sue. "What of it!"

"And I suppose you know that the men who run such markets are often called butchers," persisted Tommy.

"Everybody knows that," replied Sammy. "What has that got to do with this bird we saw fighting with Mocker the Mockingbird?"

"That you will see for yourself in a few minutes unless I am greatly mistaken," was Tommy's reply.

They crossed the old orchard and on the farther side they came to a tall bush or shrub all the branches of which were armed with long, sharp thorns. As they approached this bush Sue gave an exclamation of pity. "Oh! See that poor little bird! It must have tried to fly through the bush and flew against one of those dreadful thorns and killed itself," she cried. "What a dreadful accident."

"It wasn't an accident and it didn't fly against that thorn; it was put there," said Tommy gravely. "It was dead when it was put there," he added.

"Who put it there?" demanded Sammy bluntly.

"Who hangs up the meat in a market?" asked Tommy.

"The butcher of course," replied Sammy.

"Of course," agreed Tommy. "And it was the butcher who hung this Sparrow here."

Sue looked at him with quick understanding. "You mean it was that bird!" she cried. "Now I understand why he is named Butcher. What does he do such a dreadful thing for?"

"Is it a dreadful thing?" asked Tommy, and without waiting for an answer continued. "You don't think it dreadful for the market man to hang up the meat. That is all the Shrike does. He does it for the same purpose that poultry and other meats are placed in cold-storage—to keep for future use. He has done only what all thrifty people do, provide in time of plenty for hard times ahead."

"What I think is dreadful is that he kills other birds," protested Sue.

"You don't think it dreadful when Black Pussy catches Mice," retorted Tommy.

"But that's different!" cried Sue.

"Not to a hungry Shrike when other food is scarce," replied Tommy. "He doesn't do it to any great extent if at all in summer when he can get other food. In winter it is all very different and he takes what he can get. Look on the other side of the bush. That's a mouse hanging there. In fact there are two mice. Butcher has been having luck in his hunting. There he is watching us from the top of that telephone pole! I don't like him around my feeding-shelf, for I don't want the birds coming there killed, so when I find him in the neighborhood I usually drive him away. Just the same I rather admire his courage in daring to stay north through a cold winter when food of all kinds is scarce.

"Just the same I don't like him and I hope he'll go away," declared Sue.

"That is just the way the other birds feel, so I guess we will have to make him understand that he isn't wanted around here," replied Tommy.
